Ford's veto called an economic move

ST. LOUIS (AP) — President Gerald Ford's veto of a $7.9 billion education appropriations bill does not mean the President opposes education but means he is more concerned with holding down the budget, said David Mathews, Secretary of Health, Eduction and Welfare today.

Mathews was the opening speaker in the White House Conference on Domestic and Economic Affairs which continues here today and culminates with a speech by Ford.

Of the veto, which the Senate and House overrode earlier this week, Mathews said, "I think the veto has to be understood in light of the President's strong feeling that government must exercise itself to bring the economy under control."

The newly appointed secretary said Ford was "even handed" in other vetoes that would escalate the budget.

Mathews indicated he knew of no plans by the Iresident to possibly withhold funds appropriated by the bill following its rejection by Congress.

"We must work within the restraints of this economy," he said. "We've been concentrating on things we can do within our financial resources."

Ford was expected to arrive in St. Louis at 12:30 p.m. from Washington. He was scheduled to address the National Baptist Convention and then attend a state GOP fund raising cocktail party before appearing at the White House Conference, the ninth such event held nationally this year.

Other top Administration officials on the agenda were Russell Train, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and Frank G. Zarb, administrator of the Federal Energy Administration.

The conference, the ninth of its kind to be held nationwide this year, was expected to draw about 750 area leaders from various fields.

Security precautions surrounding Ford's visit were stringent in the wake of last week's attempted assassination in Sacramento, Calif. Although city police would not disclose the number of officers assigned to assist Secret Service agents, Asst. Chief Adolph Jacobsmeyer said it would be quite substantial.

Designed as a means of exchanging views with the people, and termed by some Administration critics as political in nature, the conference was expected to tough on such highly debated topics as oil decontrol and the environment.

In a news conference Thursday that served as a prelude to today's 10-speaker agenda, oil decontrol was the dominant topic in light of the Senate's vote Wednesday to override Ford's veto of a bill that would have extended oil-price controls for six months.

L. William Seidman, assistant to the President for economic affairs, said oil decontrol — impending if Ford and Congress do not compromise on extending controls — would raise prices "to a small degree."

But in the longer run, Seidman said, the price increase would provide oil companies with more funds for exploration for new oil and would thus increase supply, eventually leading to lower prices. "We have to pay a minor penalty now," he said.

Hearnes speaks against deficit federal spending

EAST PRAIRIE - "Excessive and uncontrolled spending is the principle source of inflation," former Gov. Warren E. Hearnes said Thursday night as he spoke at the annual Chamber of Commerce dinner held in A. J. Martin School Cafeteria.

Mayor Hunt Wellborn introduced Hearnes as a former East Prairian, when he served as city attorney, Missouri's first two-term governor and the next U.S. Senator.

An appreciative audience heard Hearnes speak out against deficit federal spending, federal funding of unnecessary research programs and the recent passage by Congress of a new law which assures Congress of an annual salary increase.

Deficit spending during the two years of the Ford administration will almost certainly exceed $100 billion, marking the acceleration of a dangerous trend, according to Hearnes, who added that the responsibility does not rest exclusively with the executive branch of government but that the blame must be shared equally by the legislative branch, since a President cannot spend without congressional authorization.

Criticizing the recently approved law giving Congress annual salary increases, Hearnes said, "This new law provides for an annual increase which will guarantee that no member of Congress ever again will suffer from inflation. Each year the raises go into effect automatically for Congress, White House assistants, the judiciary and senior members of the federal bureaucracy and in order to safeguard against public reaction, the Congress sought to conceal this pay raise by attaching it to the Postal Safety Bill."

Hearnes, a Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate in 1976, continued by saying that while we have eight per cent unemployment and millions of people struggling against crippling inflation, "Congress does not have to worry about the declining worth of the dollar. They have used their political power to better their own position."

He was also critical of the recent tax rebate received by taxpayers. "Where did it come from? Nobody knew and nobody cared. You didn't get a letter telling you the government had borrowed $8 billion at a high rate of interest to provide tax rebates and you will be paying back two to four times what you receive in the long run," Hearnes said.

"We can be grateful for the fact that state government cannot do what the Federal government does, it cannot spend more money than it takes in. I had to say no many times to programs that were good. The state has said no and must continue to do so," Hearnes said.

Hearnes said it is time to reverse the present trend toward increased deficit spending and urged those present to speak out and demand that their money be spent more cautiously and wisely to insure a more prosperous and effectively governed America.

Dr. Randall Shurtz, president of the local chamber, served as master of ceremonies for the event and introduced as special guests chamber presidents from surrounding cities.

Democrats reject Ford's newest energy compromise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democrats apparently are as unwilling to accept President Ford's program of higher energy prices as they were when the plan was offered eight months ago.

The latest evidence came Thursday night when Democrats rejected the President's newest compromise effort, offered by telephone from New Hampshire.

"The President is trying to create pressure on Congress...to knuckle under to the President's plan," charged Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, after the offer was relayed by Acting Republican Leader Robert P. Griffin of Michigan.

"If you don't do this, you're asking for confrontation with the White House and with the House...," said Griffin.

Ford and his Republican backers were urging the Senate to accept a bill, passed quickly earlier in the day by the House, that would extend controls on U.S. oil prices through Oct. 31.

During that time, the Republicans hope, Congress would approve Ford's energy plan or come up with a program that the President could accept.

The government's authority to hold down the price of oil and gasoline expired on Sept. 1. Ford vetoed a Democratic bill extending controls for six months, and the Senate fell six votes short in an attempt to override the veto.

Although controls have ended, the oil industry has been hesitant to impose any major price increase until Ford and Congress can agree on how long controls should be reimposed to allow time for working out a broad national energy policy.

Ford wants to end controls so that fuel prices will rise to force conservation and give the oil industry more money to find more energy. The aim is to reduce U.S. reliance on imported oil.

But Democrats say they fear sharp increases in fuel prices would trigger more inflation and hamper efforts to pull the national economy out of recession.

Burglary hearing scheduled

BLOOMFIELD - Preliminary hearing for Harold and Darril Warren, charged with four separate counts of burglary and stealing, has been set for Sept. 16.

Count one against the pair is breaking into Lonnie Fulkerson's Grocery Store at Gray Ridge on Aug. 29 and stealing money, batteries, a flashlite and cigarettes, cigarette lighters and watch bands.

Count two charges that the pair broke into the South Richland Grade School at Essex and stole a clock, radio, hotdogs, eggs and money.

Count three alleges they broke into Jay Rankin's Service Station at Gray Ridge and stole a flashlight, sodas, radio, cigarettes, peanuts, pies and cakes.

First cooking school attracts nearly 600

Nearly 600 area residents braved heavy rain and flooded streets to attend the Southern Kitchens Cooking School Thursday night at the Sikeston High School Fieldhouse.

The event was co-sponsored by The Daily Standard and the Progressive Farmer Magazine of Birmingham, Ala.

The two and a half-hour cooking demonstration moved quickly as Clara Fowler, of Athens, Ga., home economist for the cooking school, prepared recipes ranging from a three-foot long hero sandwich to quick, sticky buns, crumb coffee cake, beef stew and many others.

Not only did people attending the school get many new recipes to add to their collections, they also learned many cooking hints, along with the use and convenience of microwave ovens.

Program director was Susan Huett, also a member of the Southern Kitchens Cooking School staff.

Barkett's Big Star Market donated groceries used in the recipes and Turner Dairy provided the dairy products. Appliances used in the show were furnished by Coffey Appliance, P.J. Supply Co., Lewis and Kingsway Furniture Stores and Otasco.

Shy's Drug Store and Nature's Best Plant Shop were inadvertantly omitted from the list that appeared in Thursday's edition of The Daily Standard of merchants who donated door prizes, nearly 50 of which were given away.

Oran clerk trapped in car nearly hour

BENTON - An Oran man was trapped in his car almost an hour Thursday afternoon following an accident about two-and-one half miles west of town on an unmarked county road during a heavy rainstorm. He reportedly barely escaped drowning when the ditch where the car landed swiftly filled with water.

The highway patrol said the accident occurred about 2:30 p.m. Thursday when a car driven by Martin Tony Menz, 74, Oran City Clerk, came down around a hill and around a curve onto a one-lane wooden bridge. The car missed the bridge, went off on the left side and overturned.

Sgt. A. E. Mills of the highway patrol, who worked the accident along with Scott County Deputy Sheriff Dave Richbourg, said the car landed about eight feet down in the ditch on the opposite bank. It was raining and the creek was rising rapidly.

Richbourg arrived at the scene about 3:25 p.m. and helped free Menz from the car. He had been jammed between the steering wheel and the seat. The car was lying on its left side.

At one point, he told officers, he heard voices on the bridge, but when he called to them for help they had gone.

After Richbourg helped him out of the car and ditch, Menz walked around and told officers as they were trying to get his car out of the ditch that as he was coming down the hill a bolt of lightning struck and a thunderclap sounded. The next thing he knew he was off the bridge.

Mills said it was possible that Menz's car was struck by lightning. Mills said Menz did not go to the hospital at the time of the accident.

Couple seriously injured

DONIPHAN - A man and his wife were seriously injured at 5:10 p.m. Thursday 10 miles north of town on Highway 21 in the only accident reported today by the highway patrol.

The accident occurred when a southbound car driven by David W. Nicholas, 73, of Doniphan Route Two ran off the road, skidded 150 feet, and struck a large rock and several trees.

Nicholas and his wife, Nelle Nicholas, 72, received serious injuries and were taken to Ripley County Hospital at Doniphan.

The pair was arrested Wednesday. A search of the area around the Rogers home Tuesday morning was made without success.

Items taken in the burglary included watches, tape players and tapes, guns and shells.

HOW TO LOSE AN ELECTION

If President Gerald Ford intends to win next year's election and continue in the office he now holds, it must be said that Mrs. Ford isn't helping.

There are in the United States, after all, some 48 million Catholics, 27 million Baptists, 13 million Methodists, 9 million Lutherans, 6 million Jews, 4 million Eastern Orthodox church members, plus several million members of other denominations. That's a lot of votes. So, when the President's wife, on a nation-wide, coast to coast television network program, appeared to approve a code of behavior for her family at complete variance with the moral and ethical values promulgated by the churches and synagogues of America, it was easy to predict the uproar of indignation which followed.

What Mrs. Ford said, of course, was that she "would not be surprised" if her 18-year- old daughter "had an affair."

Her only stipulation seemed to be: "I'd want to know pertty much about the young man she was planning to have the affair with...."

Commented William F. Buckley: "What she did was to use her high office as First Lady ... But the role of the civic leader is to defend standards, even if the barbarians are at the gate; which they are .... It is very surprising, and very bad news, that she abused her husband's position by speaking out on the subject in contravention of ethical values established - according to her husband, who not infrequently invokes His assistance - by an authority higher even than the Supreme Court."

Taking into consideration the heat and the tension of the television interview, we would hope that Mrs. Ford did not really intend to say what she did, and that she will, at the earliest opportunity, clarify her position. If you wonder why your state and local taxes continue to go up in which we are told that inflation is the cause that isn't the only reason, as you will see.

The number of people working for state and local governments is up again, according to figures just released by the U.S. Bureau of the Census. The total, as of last October, is up 303,000 from the previous year to a new high of 9,881,000 employes.

Expressed as a total number of government employes per 10,000 of population, the average for 50 states rose in five years from 404.1 in 1969 to 467.4 in 1974, an increase of 15.7 per cent. Significantly, 49 of the states showed an increase in the number of employes per 10,000 population during the five year period. Only South Dakota showed a decline from 488.9 in 1969 to 483.5 in 1974, a drop of 11. per cent.

Another factor is that sixty per cent of the increase in the state and local totals is accounted for by employes in the field of education, which seems odd in view of the decline in children attending schools in recent years.

This is how the Bureau of the Census reported on Missouri:

Missouri: State- Local employes per 10, 000 population were 374.6 in 1969 and 428.2 in 1974, an increase of 14.3 per cent.

Just as years ago legislative and regulatory matters affecting the development of new oil reserves were considered an oil industry problem and an abundant supply of petroleum was taken for granted, so electricity is taken for granted now. Warnings from the oil industry of what was coming were ignored the same way present warnings from electric companies struggling to get rate increases to finance needed expansion of generating capacity are, in many cases, written off as self-serving.

The state of Georgia furnishes an excellent illustration of the kind of regulatory inertial that ends by depriving the public of a necessity of modern life. The electric rates of a major company have lagged behind rising costs. The company has had to declare a moratorium on construction of additional generating units in its power system. In a strikingly explicit pamphlet, it brings the approaching energy crisis for Georgia citizens into focus. The company explains that, "We must plan now to insure that the people, businesses, and industries of this state will have an adequate and reliable supply of electricity in the future. That means we must build more power plants. To do that we must have higher rates to finance that building....Georgia residents today have one of the lowest electric rates in the nation. But if things don't change--and soon--you won't have enough electricity, at any price, in the next few years. You might call this situation an energy crisis; we call it a financial crisis."

The situation in Georgia is duplicated in many areas of the nation. The question is, will people listen to the case for higher rates or will they cling to the belief that rates are a "utility problem" until the electric energy roof caves in over their heads.

A COMMENDABLE ACHIEVEMENT

America's health insurance industry offers some outstanding examples of people-oriented organizations, which is contrary to the idea that the gigantic organizations characteristic of society today are necessarily impersonal and insensitive to the individual's needs.

One example is Blue Shield, the largest U.S. medical prepayment organization, covering some 80 million people. A spokesman explains how success came to his organization: "A few years back, our business wasn't so complicated, and...even if we made the wrong decision, people would give us credit for good motives. Our critics were few, because most people were pulling for us to make it. Well, we made it. Blue Shield is the largest medical-surgical prepayment system in the world. We are no longer the underdog struggling for survival; we are the establishment. We have attracted a lot of critics. That can be helpful because it requires us to examine ourselves. Listening to other points of view builds perspective. Accepting them builds character."

Because of its attentiveness to public desires over the years, the private health insurance industry has embraced innovative change. At Blue Shield alone, there has been formation of Health Maintenance Programs, consumer representation on boards of directors, the Federal Employee Program and the like--all designed to meet the demands of an ever-changing public. Constant dedication to their objectives and the needs of those they serve has made Blue Shield, and the U.S. health insurance industry as a whole, the best of its kind in any nation. That is a major reason why Americans, to an increasing degree, can be assured of more individualized and higher quality treatment under the U.S. medical system than is available anywhere else in the world.

WIDESPREAD DRUG USE ONLY A MYTH?

Popular notions about the extent of drug use in this country seem to be out of phase with the facts.

For the past eight years, a team of researchers with the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research has been following a sample group of 1,600 males and recording their drug experiences and attitudes. The study's findings have consistently run counter to popular beliefs, says its director Lloyd Johnston.

"The findings we reported in 1970 did not reinforce public opinion," he says. "Drug use turned out to be far less prevalent among young people than was commonly believed."

Before graduating from high school in 1969, less than a quarter of this age group had used any illicit drug, and about half of those using drugs had merely experimented once or twice, usually with marijuana.

Now the common belief seems to be that the problem of young people using illicit drugs has declined considerably. The data, however, "indicate that substantial proportions and absolute numbers of young people are involved with drugs to some degree."

For example, in the year prior to June 1974, more than half of all 23-year-old males (based on the study group) smoked some marijuana, over one-fifth made some use of amphetamines without a prescription and the proportions for barbiturates, cocaine and psychedelics were all greater than one-tenth.

The number who had tried these drugs at some time during their lives was even higher: 62 per cent for marijuana, 32 per cent for amphetamines, 19 per cent for barbiturates, 22 per cent for psychedelics and over 6 per cent for heroin.

On the positive side, observes, Johnston, much of the illicit drug use involves marijuana, the harmful effects of which have yet to be convincingly proven. About half of those youths using each of the other illicit drugs during 1974 did so only once or twice. Regular drug use rates seem to have peaked some time ago for this particular age group.

The investigators asked their 23-year-old respondents whether they would either begin using marijuana or use it more often if it were legalized. Only 15 per cent indicated they would, while another 11 per cent were uncertain. The amount of experience the individual had with marijuana seemed to have practically no effect upon his attitude.

Ironically, the older age groups may be most effected by any changes in the marijuana laws, thinks Johnston, since most young people already seem to have made their choice. Almost universally, they have had exposure and access to the drug, while most older people have not.

HONEY, DID YOU READ THIS?

Since we ran the item about nagging wives, and the fact that "men will love you in proportion as you refrain from bothering them," we've had the fact pointed out to us that there is such a thing as a lazy husband.

One lady, who called in to complain that her husband stuck the "nag" article in front of her nose, reports that her husband is so lazy that if his ship came in, he wouldn't bother to unload it. She said she has to have a cup of coffee waiting for him when he gets up in the morning. (We told her to make it and set it out the night before.)

She said he's so lazy that the first thing he does when he gets up in the morning is take a sleeping pill. He doesn't know how long he's been out of work-he can't find his birth certificate! The only thing he can do fast is get tired. His self-winding watch is three days slow.

Being men, it's hard for us to understand anyone being that lazy. All we can suggest is that anyone who has a man that lazy should buy the fellow a book on how to play the trombone. That's the only way you can get anywhere by letting things slide. (If you don't think that's funny, don't blame us. We're too tired to do it over.)

Washington Merry-Go-Round

JACK ANDERSON SAYS: FBI's Electronic Watchdog with Les Whitten

WASHINGTON — The computer system, which the FBI is supposed to use in its war against crime, has been misused to keep tabs on noncriminals.

For years, the FBI has operated a National Crime Information Center, which is equipped with a multi-million-dollar computer. This is now crammed with information about criminals. The purpose is to help police throughout the country identify public enemies, particularly fugitives on the lam.

On Arizona highway patrolman, for example, may stop a speeder who appears suspicious. The office could query the FBI computer center and might discover the driver is wanted for kidnapping in Maine.

It was never intended, however, that this all-knowing, never-forgetting electronic contrivance should be used to store information about noncriminals.

Such misues, if it should get out of hand, could extinguish forever the right of privacy. It could lead to a computerized master file on all Americans. At the press of a button, the computer could produce any person's entire life history.

In 1971, the FBI began using its master computer to monitor the activities of noncriminals. The names of more than 4,700 noncriminals were "flagged."

The FBI abruptly ended its misuse of the computer center in February, 1974, precisely two days before Sen. Sam Ervin, D-N.C., opened hearings on federal snooping.

But Ervin's successor as head of the Senate Constitutional Rights subcommittee, Sen. John Tunney, D-Calif., has now wrung a reluctant confession from the Justice Department that the FBI had perverted the criminal tracking system to keep an electronic eye on noncriminals.

"Flags were used to help locate individuals in matters wherein the FBI had the obligation to determine their whereabouts," Deputy Attorney General Harold Tyler conceded in a private letter to Tunney.

The letter stressed this was done, as a "pilot program," in "national security" cases. The term "national security" has been used in the past, however, to include controversial movie stars, football players, political leaders, newspapermen and even presidential candidates.

An FBI spokesman emphasized that the 4,700 noncriminals, whose names were fed into the computer, were "under FBI jurisdiction." As he explained it, for example, a potential draftee who failed to report to the Selective Service might have been "flagged."

Senator Tunney is suspicious that the FBI computer has been used to keep track of Congressmen. He asked the Justice Department pointblank whether the FBI had any Congressmen in the "flag file." Tyler artfully dodged the question, but the FBI vigourously denied that any Members of Congress had been monitored.

The spokesman also pointed out that the computer center was not under the FBI's sole jurisdiction but was governed by a 26-man board, including various chiefs of police.

The skeptical Tunney, meanwhile, is pressing the Justice Department for more specific answers. He is concerned that the misuse of the computer may be a federal violation.

-- The underdeveloped, third-world nations are trying to get their hands in Uncle Sam's pockets. It's all part of their campaign to redistribute the world's wealth from the rich nations to the poor nations. One suggestion, brought up in the backrooms of Washington, is that the U.S. put the third-world nations on the spot by offering a program to concentrate the aid upon the 30 or 40 most impoverished nations. This would bypass the nations raising the loudest holler.

New revolutionary union-ists: Mysterious 'radicalizing' small cell operatives costing U.S. millions in outlaw strikes

NEW YORK — From the shabbily sheltered "collectives" in this uptight city and from the ancient radical hub in Chicago andthe neo-Maoist "central" in San Francisco, the new "radicalizers" of the '70s pour forth these days to create chaos.

They've just cropped up in the coal fields -- heating up a strike that cost scores of millions of dollars. They've been agitating inside the U.S. postal system. They're strung out in the retail food industry -- ranging from Washington D.C. to Southern California. They've put together paper-thin, but razor-edged employed-unemployed committees in the Midwest. They've picketed United Steelworkers meetings shouting, "Raise hell -- not dues."

They are radicals of different kinds. But their slogans run strangely similar:

Whether it's a handful of Vietnam vets in the strike-bound Groton-New London, Conn., submarine construction center, or on the steel industry front, or in the huge northern New Jersey bulk mailing complex or outside a Milwaukee area steel workers meeting, the "revolutionary" cries are -- end the no-strike pledge, open the contracts to give "us" the right to strike and let's take over.

It's a slithering new radical phenomenon to many observers. But until the coal strike broke early in August, few took these activists seriously -- except a handful of experienced industry and labor leaders who suddenly found their peaceful collective bargaining efforts and contracts being shredded by the violent rhetoric of the collectives' leaders. Virtually all of the latter are university-educated.

In recent weeks, coal and steel industry executives, national United Mine Workers officials, whose union may yet have to pay a $1 million fine for violating an end-the-strike federal court order, U.S. marshals and federal intelligence agents were startled at the influence in the soft coal fields of a mere handful of men and one woman.

One of the loudest voices against obeying the U. S. district court injunction to call off the coal-diggers' wildcat strike was that of a mysterious Skip Delano. He is one of the most thoroughly skilled speakers, brilliant in his ability to get to the TV and print media men, adamant in demanding "the right to strike." And few appeared to know whence he came.

The postal authorities, the U.S. marshals and the FBI learned there had been a Skip Delano in the New York Metro-Area Postal Union (local of the American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO). He had worked as a "flexie," meaning a part-time sub-clerk in the big General Post Office. He was glib. He was tough. Big. And he got himself elected a shop steward. This was some two years ago. He was active right through 1974.

Most of the time, postal union leaders say, this Delano "hollered" for a strike though it was illegal.

There is a group inside the Post Office which proudly calls itself the "Outlaw," Just a caucus name. Always shouting at meetings about sellouts.

Authorities have said that Skip was an "outlaw." Raucous shop steward. The Outlaw caucus in the Post Office is championed by the tabloid "Revolution." This is the official publication of the Revolutionary Union (RU). Address – a post office box in Chicago's Merchandise Mart.

The authorities and inside observers report that the RU has been active in the coal fields for several years – and that it's Maoist in thought. There are all sorts of documents on the RU. And federal sources tell me there are scores of such small radical groups coming out of the "political woodwork."

Now what startled the authorities and industry-labor circles was the appearance of Skip Delano in the coal fields. The Skip Delano of the New York Post Office had left the postal system in Decembr 1974. The Skip Delano of the coal fields had begun "hollering" against coal peace and the miners' new no-strike contract and for the "right to strike" several months ago.

Thus it took "Skip Delano," whoever he is, just about four or five months to get settled in the West Virginia bituminous fields, whip up a following and get them to continue the wildcat to such a point that U.S. marshals subpoenaed him and an ally last week.

Unfortunately, all too few are concerned now over Maoist infiltration or seizure of an industry by one of the tiny collectives. However the federal authorities are worried by the ease and skill with which the RUs and the other new radicals so easily infiltrate a field, create labor-management dissension, prolong a strike and thereby develop radical credibility.

The coal strike came to within a few weeks of cutting heavily into the steel, auto and rail industries and perhaps browning out communities short on soft coal. There is enough noise in some steel plants to worry those who have put together the experimental no-strike agreement. There is concern in the food industry.

And most of all there is wonderment over the ease with which the rank and file is lured onto the picket lines, cheering class hatred rhetoric during today's crucial economic crises.

HOW TO LOSE AN ELECTION

If President Gerald Ford intends to win next year's election and continue in the office he now holds, it must be said that Mrs. Ford isn't helping.

There are in the United States, after all, some 48 million Catholics, 27 million Baptists, 13 million Methodists, 9 million Lutherans, 6 million Jews, 4 million Eastern Orthodox church members, plus several million members of other denominations. That's a lot of votes. So, when the President's wife, on a nation-wide, coast to coast television network program, appeared to approve a code of behavior for her family at complete variance with the moral and ethical values promulgated by the churches and synagogues of America, it was easy to predict the uproar of indignation which followed.

What Mrs. Ford said, of course, was that she "would not be surprised" if her 18-year- old daughter "had an affair."

Her only stipulation seemed to be: "I'd want to know pertty much about the young man she was planning to have the affair with...."

Commented William F. Buckley: "What she did was to use her high office as First Lady ... But the role of the civic leader is to defend standards, even if the barbarians are at the gate; which they are .... It is very surprising, and very bad news, that she abused her husband's position by speaking out on the subject in contravention of ethical values established - according to her husband, who not infrequently invokes His assistance - by an authority higher even than the Supreme Court."

Because of its attentiveness to public desires over the years, the private health insurance industry has embraced innovative change. At Blue Shield alone, there has been formation of Health Maintenance Programs, consumer representation on boards of directors, the Federal Employee Program and the like--all designed to meet the demands of an ever-changing public. Constant dedication to their objectives and the needs of those they serve has made Blue Shield, and the U.S. health insurance industry as a whole, the best of its kind in any nation. That is a major reason why Americans, to an increasing degree, can be assured of more individualized and higher quality treatment under the U.S. medical system than is available anywhere else in the world.

BICENTENNIAL PROJECT CHALLENGES STUDENTS

The Sophia & William Casey Foundation of New York has announced a "Students Self-Starter Challenge" program to encourage students in the 12 to 21 age bracket to do research on the origins of the American independence. Eligible projects will qualify for grants up to $250.

The Foundation says there are no set rules on what constitutes an eligible project but emphasizes it is particularly interested in projects wherein the applicant undertakes to investigate, research and write on some phase of the American Revolution.

The Foundation adds, however, that any project which a student is prepared to carry out on his own and which is sensibly related to the Bicentennial celebration will be considered.

Applicants should write to the Sophia & Williams Casey Foundation, Box 73, Glen Head, NY 11545.

WIDESPREAD DRUG USE ONLY A MYTH?

Popular notions about the extent of drug use in this country seem to be out of phase with the facts.

For the past eight years, a team of researchers with the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research has been following a sample group of 1,600 males and recording their drug experiences and attitudes. The study's findings have consistently run counter to popular beliefs, says its director Lloyd Johnston.

"The findings we reported in 1970 did not reinforce public opinion," he says. "Drug use turned out to be far less prevalent among young people than was commonly believed."

Before graduating from high school in 1969, less than a quarter of this age group had used any illicit drug, and about half of those using drugs had merely experimented once or twice, usually with marijuana.

Now the common belief seems to be that the problem of young people using illicit drugs has declined considerably. The data, however, "indicate that substantial proportions and absolute numbers of young people are involved with drugs to some degree."

For example, in the year prior to June 1974, more than half of all 23-year-old males (based on the study group) smoked some marijuana, over one-fifth made some use of amphetamines without a prescription and the proportions for barbiturates, cocaine and psychedelics were all greater than one-tenth.

The number who had tried these drugs at some time during their lives was even higher: 62 per cent for marijuana, 32 per cent for amphetamines, 19 per cent for barbiturates, 22 per cent for psychedelics and over 6 per cent for heroin.

On the positive side, observes, Johnston, much of the illicit drug use involves marijuana, the harmful effects of which have yet to be convincingly proven. About half of those youths using each of the other illicit drugs during 1974 did so only once or twice. Regular drug use rates seem to have peaked some time ago for this particular age group.

The investigators asked their 23-year-old respondents whether they would either begin using marijuana or use it more often if it were legalized. Only 15 per cent indicated they would, while another 11 per cent were uncertain. The amount of experience the individual had with marijuana seemed to have practically no effect upon his attitude.

Ironically, the older age groups may be most effected by any changes in the marijuana laws, thinks Johnston, since most young people already seem to have made their choice. Almost universally, they have had exposure and access to the drug, while most older people have not.

MICHIGAN COMPANY TURNS WATER TO GAS

A Michigan research company is working on an efficient means to convert ordinary water into synthetic pipeline gas.

Using a laser-energy source to convert the hydrogen in water into methane is not a new development, said K.M. Siegel, chairman and chief executive officer, KMS Fusion, Ann Arbor, but he claims that his company has found a "more efficient way" to do it. The result is supposed to be virtually 100 per cent identical to natural gas.

One of the companies planning to invest heavily in the research is Texas Gas Transmission.

HONEY, DID YOU READ THIS?

Since we ran the item about nagging wives, and the fact that "men will love you in proportion as you refrain from bothering them," we've had the fact pointed out to us that there is such a thing as a lazy husband.

One lady, who called in to complain that her husband stuck the "nag" article in front of her nose, reports that her husband is so lazy that if his ship came in, he wouldn't bother to unload it. She said she has to have a cup of coffee waiting for him when he gets up in the morning. (We told her to make it and set it out the night before.)

She said he's so lazy that the first thing he does when he gets up in the morning is take a sleeping pill. He doesn't know how long he's been out of work-he can't find his birth certificate! The only thing he can do fast is get tired. His self-winding watch is three days slow.

Being men, it's hard for us to understand anyone being that lazy. All we can suggest is that anyone who has a man that lazy should buy the fellow a book on how to play the trombone. That's the only way you can get anywhere by letting things slide. (If you don't think that's funny, don't blame us. We're too tired to do it over.)

Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Jack Anderson

JACK ANDERSON SAYS: FBI's Electronic Watchdog with Les Whitten

WASHINGTON — The computer system, which the FBI is supposed to use in its war against crime, has been misused to keep tabs on noncriminals.

For years, the FBI has operated a National Crime Information Center, which is equipped with a multi-million-dollar computer. This is now crammed with information about criminals. The purpose is to help police throughout the country identify public enemies, particularly fugitives on the lam.

On Arizona highway patrolman, for example, may stop a speeder who appears suspicious. The office could query the FBI computer center and might discover the driver is wanted for kidnapping in Maine.

It was never intended, however, that this all-knowing, never-forgetting electronic contrivance should be used to store information about noncriminals.

Such misues, if it should get out of hand, could extinguish forever the right of privacy. It could lead to a computerized master file on all Americans. At the press of a button, the computer could produce any person's entire life history.

In 1971, the FBI began using its master computer to monitor the activities of noncriminals. The names of more than 4,700 noncriminals were "flagged."

The FBI abruptly ended its misuse of the computer center in February, 1974, precisely two days before Sen. Sam Ervin, D-N.C., opened hearings on federal snooping.

But Ervin's successor as head of the Senate Constitutional Rights subcommittee, Sen. John Tunney, D-Calif., has now wrung a reluctant confession from the Justice Department that the FBI had perverted the criminal tracking system to keep an electronic eye on noncriminals.

"Flags were used to help locate individuals in matters wherein the FBI had the obligation to determine their whereabouts," Deputy Attorney General Harold Tyler conceded in a private letter to Tunney.

The letter stressed this was done, as a "pilot program," in "national security" cases. The term "national security" has been used in the past, however, to include controversial movie stars, football players, political leaders, newspapermen and even presidential candidates.

An FBI spokesman emphasized that the 4,700 noncriminals, whose names were fed into the computer, were "under FBI jurisdiction." As he explained it, for example, a potential draftee who failed to report to the Selective Service might have been "flagged."

Senator Tunney is suspicious that the FBI computer has been used to keep track of Congressmen. He asked the Justice Department pointblank whether the FBI had any Congressmen in the "flag file." Tyler artfully dodged the question, but the FBI vigourously denied that any Members of Congress had been monitored.

The spokesman also pointed out that the computer center was not under the FBI's sole jurisdiction but was governed by a 26-man board, including various chiefs of police.

The skeptical Tunney, meanwhile, is pressing the Justice Department for more specific answers. He is concerned that the misuse of the computer may be a federal violation.

INTELLIGENCE DIGEST: Once the Israeli-Egyptian agreement is implemented, an intelligence report warns, Arab extremists plan to infiltrate into the neutral zone and kill some of the American technicians manning the observation equipment. The intent, of course, is to disrupt the truce.

--A CIA report alleges that Soviet money has been passed under the table to bribe one of Portugal's top rulers. We are checking out the details.

-- Japan's Defense Minister Michita Sakata has given secret assurances that the U.S. can use military bases in Japan to resist a North Korean attack upon South Korea. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, meanwhile, has made some anti-Japanese cracks inside the secret policy councils.

-- The Shah of Iran has confided to visitors that he hopes to bring diplomatic pressure to exclude boththe U.S. and Soviet fleets, first, from the Persian Gulf and then from the Indian Ocean.

-- The Soviet KGB, according to intelligence reports, is encouraging Arab extremists to step up their revolutionary activities against the oil sheikdoms. Both Algeria and Libya are cooperating, at least indirectly, with the KGB, the reports allege.

-- Of all the oil countries, Saudi Arabia stands alone in seeking to hold off an oil price increase. Seven of the 13 oil cartel members, led by Algeria and Kuwait, want a stunning $2-per-barrel increase on October 1. The five remaining oil countries are willing to settle for $1 per barrel more.

-- Egypt's President Anwar Sadat is quietly seeking from the U.S. $250 million in economic aid and favorable terms for the purchase of up to $1 billion in military equipment.

-- The Chinese Communists have gained the ear of the rulers of Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. Significantly, the Chinese are whispering anti-Soviet, not anti-American remarks.

-- The underdeveloped, third-world nations are trying to get their hands in Uncle Sam's pockets. It's all part of their campaign to redistribute the world's wealth from the rich nations to the poor nations. One suggestion, brought up in the backrooms of Washington, is that the U.S. put the third-world nations on the spot by offering a program to concentrate the aid upon the 30 or 40 most impoverished nations. This would bypass the nations raising the loudest holler.

Inside Labor

New revolutionary union-ists: Mysterious 'radicalizing' small cell operatives costing U.S. millions in outlaw strikes

NEW YORK — From the shabbily sheltered "collectives" in this uptight city and from the ancient radical hub in Chicago andthe neo-Maoist "central" in San Francisco, the new "radicalizers" of the '70s pour forth these days to create chaos.

They've just cropped up in the coal fields -- heating up a strike that cost scores of millions of dollars. They've been agitating inside the U.S. postal system. They're strung out in the retail food industry -- ranging from Washington D.C. to Southern California. They've put together paper-thin, but razor-edged employed-unemployed committees in the Midwest. They've picketed United Steelworkers meetings shouting, "Raise hell -- not dues."

They are radicals of different kinds. But their slogans run strangely similar:

Whether it's a handful of Vietnam vets in the strike-bound Groton-New London, Conn., submarine construction center, or on the steel industry front, or in the huge northern New Jersey bulk mailing complex or outside a Milwaukee area steel workers meeting, the "revolutionary" cries are -- end the no-strike pledge, open the contracts to give "us" the right to strike and let's take over.

It's a slithering new radical phenomenon to many observers. But until the coal strike broke early in August, few took these activists seriously -- except a handful of experienced industry and labor leaders who suddenly found their peaceful collective bargaining efforts and contracts being shredded by the violent rhetoric of the collectives' leaders. Virtually all of the latter are university-educated.

In recent weeks, coal and steel industry executives, national United Mine Workers officials, whose union may yet have to pay a $1 million fine for violating an end-the-strike federal court order, U.S. marshals and federal intelligence agents were startled at the influence in the soft coal fields of a mere handful of men and one woman.

One of the loudest voices against obeying the U. S. district court injunction to call off the coal-diggers' wildcat strike was that of a mysterious Skip Delano. He is one of the most thoroughly skilled speakers, brilliant in his ability to get to the TV and print media men, adamant in demanding "the right to strike." And few appeared to know whence he came.

The postal authorities, the U.S. marshals and the FBI learned there had been a Skip Delano in the New York Metro-Area Postal Union (local of the American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO). He had worked as a "flexie," meaning a part-time sub-clerk in the big General Post Office. He was glib. He was tough. Big. And he got himself elected a shop steward. This was some two years ago. He was active right through 1974.

Most of the time, postal union leaders say, this Delano "hollered" for a strike though it was illegal.

There is a group inside the Post Office which proudly calls itself the "Outlaw,". Just a caucus name. Always shouting at meetings about sellouts.

Authorities have said that Skip was an "outlaw." Raucous shop steward. The Outlaw caucus in the Post Office is championed by the tabloid "Revolution." This is the official publication of the Revolutionary Union (RU). Address – a post office box in Chicago's Merchandise Mart.

The authorities and inside observers report that the RU has been active in the coal fields for several years -- and that it's Maoist in thought. There are all sorts of documents on the RU. And federal sources tell me there are scores of such small radical groups coming out of the "political woodwork."

Now what startled the authorities and industry-labor circles was the appearance of Skip Delano in the coal fields. The Skip Delano of the New York Post Office had left the postal system in Decembr 1974. The Skip Delano of the coal fields had begun "hollering" against coal peace and the miners' new no-strike contract and for the "right to strike" several months ago.

Thus it took "Skip Delano," whoever he is, just about four or five months to get settled in the West Virginia bituminous fields, whip up a following and get them to continue the wildcat to such a point that U.S. marshals subpoenaed him and an ally last week.

Unfortunately, all too few are concerned now over Maoist infiltration or seizure of an industry by one of the tiny collectives. However the federal authorities are worried by the ease and skill with which the RUs and the other new radicals so easily infiltrate a field, create labor-management dissension, prolong a strike and thereby develop radical credibility.

The coal strike came to within a few weeks of cutting heavily into the steel, auto and rail industries and perhaps browning out communities short on soft coal. There is enough noise in some steel plants to worry those who have put together the experimental no-strike agreement. There is concern in the food industry.

And most of all there is wonderment over the ease with which the rank and file is lured onto the picket lines, cheering class hatred rhetoric during today's crucial economic crises.

Ehrlichman lives quiet life alone

By LARRY CALLOWAY
Associated Press Writer

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — John Ehrlichman, suntanned and bearded after six months of his new life among the artists along Canyon Road here, might be writing about Watergate. But he's not talking.

His landlady says he's writing a book, and he did not deny a report that he is under contract with Simon and Schuster for a novel said to be autobiographical.

"I just wouldn't comment on it," was his response, made through the cracks in the plank gate of the high adobe wall at his fashionable hilltop cottage.

Unlike other main characters in the nation's Watergate drama, Richard M. Nixon's former chief domestic adviser and long-time political lieutenant has shunned the lecture circuit and refused interviews.

In a grocery store conversation — he does his own shopping — he reasoned that if he grants one interview he'll be hounded. "And I would have broken faith with about 20 others who have asked and have been refused," he said.

Ehrlichman lives alone here; his wife is still in Seattle. Disbarred by the Supreme Court and facing two federal prison terms, he awaits the long process of court appeals. At age 50, he has traces of gray in his black beard and moustache.

He rents from Margaret Twyman, 60, who lives next door. "He strikes me as a very decent fellow. He's a good tenant. He's growing vegetables over there and taking care of the lawn," she said.

"He commented one time he was writing a book, and I guess he is," she said. "I don't hear any typing over there, so maybe he's writing it in longhand."

Mrs. Twyman, incidentally, lived in the Watergate Apartments in Washington, D.C., before she moved to Santa Fe last October, leaving a job with the State Department for one with the National Park Service here. But she said she never met Ehrlichman in Washington.

Thomas A. Brown, a remodeler and craftsman, said he sold her the houses for about $65,000. The Ehrlichman cottage has one bedroom, corner fireplaces, Mexican tiles and an impressive view, he said.

This area's history dates to Spanish colonists in 1590, and many of the neighborhoods, including Ehrlichman's, are disorderly collections of old adobe houses and dirt roads. The Spanish-speaking neighbors are slowly selling to newcomers, many of them artists or owners of stores specializing in craft items. A 90-unit condominium is planned across the road.

The beard doesn't hide Ehrlichman in Santa Fe, which despite its 40,000 population and cosmopolitan residents, retains a small-town neighborliness.

But there's a tradition of leaving people alone that has let other celebrities, from John Wayne to poet Alan Ginsberg, pass through seemingly without notice.

Ehrlichman plays tennis, goes to quiet parties and frequents the more intimate restaurants. Meanwhile, his wife, Jeanne, has taken a job with the Seattle Symphony. She declines all comment about her relationship with her husband.

At least some of their five children have visited Ehrlichman here, and their youngest son, Robert, played guitar and sang for a while at a casual Canyon Road restaurant called "The Bistro."

William Kirschke, the young conductor of the Orchestra of Santa Fe, says on the basis of a conversation at a social gathering that Ehrlichman's knowledge of music is impressive. They talked about the Santa Fe Opera's production of "Falstaff," which Ehrlichman saw.

The ethic on Canyon Road, expressed time and again, is you don't talk politics with John Ehrlichman or you'll ruin the party.

"He's laid back. He's got some dues to pay," said a bearded musician. "But who am I to say how much?"

A waitress who has served him at a coffee house said, "I don't like him, but that's just politics. Heck, all he does here is eat."

His postman, Johnny Garcia, said, "He's nice to me. We talk about the weather. I think he's had enough problems as it is. Why try to bring Watergate up?"

Perhaps in response to the "live and let live" attitude, the Ehrlichman of the streets of Santa Fe is nothing like the scowling witness of the Senate Watergate hearings two years ago. He has a ready smile and a manner that one lady shopkeeper described as "very charming."

Politics can be serious business in this state capital where 37 per cent of the jobs are with state government. Watergate drew more interest than in some other places since this is the home town of Sen. Joseph M. Montoya, D-N.M., of the Senate Watergate Committee.

Montoya says he hasn't come in contact with Ehrlichman here and, "It hasn't come to my attention that any problems have come up because he's living here. As a private citizen he's entitled to his privacy, and I hope he gets his matters with the courts straightened out."

Ehrlichman's initial explanation of why he moved to Santa Fe was that he wanted to do personal pennance by volunteering his legal knowledge of land problems to the Pueblo Indians. But the governing body of the eight northern tribes turned him down.

So did U.S. District Court Judge John Sirica when Ehrlichman attorney Ira M. Lowe proposed the Indian service as an alternative to Ehrlichman's 2½-to 8-year prison sentence.

Library lists new publications

"The Surface Of Earth", by Reynolds Price, is a new addition to the book collection at Sikeston Public Library.

The narrative charts two families in their slow inextreicable twining. Joined by the elopement of a 16-year-old girl with her Latin teacher, they affect one another, their surrounding and their numerous dependents through more than 40 years — 1903-1944 — in the plain of North Carolina and the coast and hills of Virginia.

The marriage of Forrest Mayfield and Eva Kendal, the hard birth of their son, Eva's return to her father after the death of her mother - these are the apparent start of the journey by Mayfiels and Kendals, across time and the intensely evoked America of the first half of our century, toward an unforeseen but hoped-for destination.

Other new books at the library include:

Fiction — "The Place Of Stones", by Constance Heaven; "Madam Ambassador", by Ned Calmer; "Burlington Square", by Lauranece Meynell; "A City On a Hill", by Georte Higgins; and "A More Goodly Country", by John Sanford.

Non-fiction — "The Gardener's Basic Book Of Flowers" by Stanley Schuler; "The American Party Systems", by William Chambers' "For the Defense" by F. Lee Bailey; "A Fine and Peaceful Kingdom", by Kent Durden; "America's Tennis Book", by Curtis Casewit; and "Scenic Wonders of America", Reader's Digest.

Nathaniel Bacon staged an unsuccessful revolt in Virginia, May 10 to Oct. 18, 1676, because of abuses in government administration and taxation.

Perhaps in response to the "live and let live" attitude, the Ehrlichman of the streets of Santa Fe is nothing like the scowling witness of the Senate Watergate hearings two years ago. He has a ready smile and a manner that one lady shopkeeper described as "very charming."

Politics can be serious business in this state capital where 37 per cent of the jobs are with state government. Watergate drew more interest than in some other places since this is the home town of Sen. Joseph M. Montoya, D-N.M., of the Senate Watergate Committee.

Montoya says he hasn't come in contact with Ehrlichman here and, "It hasn't come to my attention that any problems have come up because he's living here. As a private citizen he's entitled to his privacy, and I hope he gets his matters with the courts straightened out."

Ehrlichman's initial explanation of why he moved to Santa Fe was that he wanted to do personal pennance by volunteering his legal knowledge of land problems to the Pueblo Indians. But the governing body of the eight northern tribes turned him down.

So did U.S. District Court Judge John Sirica when Ehrlichman attorney Ira M. Lowe proposed the Indian service as an alternative to Ehrlichman's 2½-to 8-year prison sentence.

Library lists new publications

"The Surface Of Earth", by Reynolds Price, is a new addition to the book collection at Sikeston Public Library.

The narrative charts two families in their slow inextreicable twining. Joined by the elopement of a 16-year-old girl with her Latin teacher, they affect one another, their surrounding and their numerous dependents through more than 40 years — 1903-1944 — in the plain of North Carolina and the coast and hills of Virginia.

The marriage of Forrest Mayfield and Eva Kendal, the hard birth of their son, Eva's return to her father after the death of her mother - these are the apparent start of the journey by Mayfiels and Kendals, across time and the intensely evoked America of the first half of our century, toward an unforeseen but hoped-for destination.

Other new books at the library include:

Fiction — "The Place Of Stones", by Constance Heaven; "Madam Ambassador", by Ned Calmer; "Burlington Square", by Lauranece Meynell; "A City On a Hill", by Georte Higgins; and "A More Goodly Country", by John Sanford.

Non-fiction — "The Gardener's Basic Book Of Flowers" by Stanley Schuler; "The American Party Systems", by William Chambers' "For the Defense" by F. Lee Bailey; "A Fine and Peaceful Kingdom", by Kent Durden; "America's Tennis Book", by Curtis Casewit; and "Scenic Wonders of America", Reader's Digest.

Nathaniel Bacon staged an unsuccessful revolt in Virginia, May 10 to Oct. 18, 1676, because of abuses in government administration and taxation.

Subsidizing large families would create stronger family ties, stronger country

In this age of planned parenthood and professional child care, the idea of the federal government subsidizing large families — and mothers and other relatives to raise them — may seem radical.

But Dr. Robert S. Mendelsohn, associate professor of preventive medicine and community health at University of Illinois School of Medicine and former national director of the Head Start Medical Consultation Service, feels large families may be the key to this country's survival.

He argues parents and their relatives must join together to form a child-care system instead of depending on such persons as social workers, nurses and others to do the job.

"The best child-welfare system consistes of children being raised not in day-care centers, not by professional advocates, but in their own homes, by their own fathers and mothers, assisted by aunts, uncles, cousins and grandparents," Mendelsohn said in recent testimony before a House-Senate hearing on the 1975 child and family services bill.

"Th helping professional — social worker, teacher, obstetrician, pediatrician, psychiatrist, psychologist, educator, nurse — representss inherently and in practice a threat to family relationships," he continued. "The so-called 'helping progessional' may give the image of a family friend, but in reality — both historically and on the contemporary scene —he is the enemy of the family. Any action that increases the power of the professional automatically lessens the strength of the family."

Mendelsohn's belief is based "On an assumption the survival of society depends on family strength," he said in a recent interview.

"There's no way to have a strong family when it's small," Mendelsohn added. "Scientific studies have shown that large families are healthier than small ones. Margaret Mead and Andrew Billingsley have been saying this for years."

Although most people view professionals as supporting the family, they actually weaken it, Mendelsohn said. "The cycle starts at the hospital, which usuaully doesn't like having parents around."

Even at birth, Mendelsohn noted, the baby is separated from the mother and put in a nursery.

"Once you buy my argument about doctors and hospitals, next are social workers and teachers," he said. "For example, our public welfare system is set up so if the father is found in the house, the family gets no support. So the incentive is for the father to leave."

As for the school system, Mendelsohn said it's set up to "teach children things different from what parents teach them."

He cited sex education which many parents can't communicate to their children, and the new math as examples.

Day-care centers are the most dangerous examples of professionals weakening the family, Mendelsohn said. "They do more damage because they get the chance to teach children at a younger age."

Mendelsohn has mapped out ways to counteract the growing dependence on professionals. He calls for the federal government to establish a child allowance program such a the one in Canada, under which every mother received $6 per month per child. And he suggests that mothers be paid an annual wage. He also recommends the government "double or triple the income tax exemption for each child."

"If parenting were considered an occupation and compensated accordingly — if women were paid as much to stay home, breast-feed their infants and care for their children as they now are paid for going to work — we would then have a real opportunity to see how many would choose fulfillment through occupationsfor themselves and the corollary of day-care centers for their children," he said at the hearing.

Mendelsohn said he has been called "radical, fanatic and nuts. I believe in the family — and that's not radical. If it's anything. It's a conservative point of view."

Mendelsohn, 49, said he became an advocate of large families and parental child care after his Head Start experience — too late to have a large family of his own. But then his daughters, 19 and 20, years old have children and he will assist them financially so they can stay home and rise large families, he said.

Revolting Boston accent worse than Bronx one

Dear Ann Landers: You say you "love the Boston accent" -- that it "has class with a capital K." Tell me please, exactly what IS a Boston accent?

Do you mean the way Elliot Richardson talks, or Ted Kennedy? They don't sound in the least alike. Have you actually listened to the typical man on the street in Boston? I doubt it. It's revolting. Worse than Brooklyn or the Bronx.

Your humble stance gets to me. Surely you don't believe you must look to Boston for superb education! The late Adlai Stevenson was in a class with Sir Winston Churchill. Moreover, your own two Senators, Charles Percy and Adlai III, speak very well indeed. Please, Ann, open your ears and LISTEN. -- Beantown, Bah!

Dear Bah: I agree there ain't no flies on Sens. Percy or Stevenson but I'm hopelessly hooked on the Boston sound -- whatever it is. I happen to like the way Elliot Richardson speaks and also Ted Kennedy. (He sounds like Jack.) Mayor Kevin White's way with the language sends me into orbit. So do me something – that's MY hang-up.

Dear Ann Landers: After many years of marriage I find I can't live with my husband any longer. He was picked up by the police for indecent exposure shortly after we returned from our honeymoon. I nearly died of shock. Couldn't believe it. The judge let him off with a fine and ordered him to get psychiatric treatment.

He went to a psychiatrist twice and quit.

It seems the laws are very lax when it comes to this sort of thing. My husband has been arrested as a Peeping Tom, for contributing to the delinquency of a minor, exposing himself in a public park -- just name it and he's done it. Of course all these arrests have appeared in the papers and I have been humiliated so many times I can't count them.

His family is mad at me because they say he is sick (which he is) and it's partly my fault for not getting him to a doctor. How can you make a person go to a doctor if he doesn't want to?

I'll be 50 next month and I want to live my remaining years in peace. I'm not thinking of remarriage, Ann, just a life free from the agony that has plagued me. Even our priest says I should get a legal separation. What do you say? -- Pensacola Woman

Dear Woman: Listen to your priest. Maybe when you leave your husband he'll get the help he so desperately needs. Let's hope so.

Dear Ann Landers: I recently married a divorced man who has three young children. He tried to get custody but his wife fought it in court and won. The divorce laws in this country are a disgrace. Unless a woman is a prostitute or a dope addict she can keep her children even though the father is the superior parent.

My problem is this: What should his children call me? The oldest one is ten, the youngest five. I prefer my first name. My husband says it's not respectful and has suggested "Aunt May" or "Mama May." What's your preference? – Stumped

Dear Stumped: You aren't their aunt, so scratch that one. "Mama May" is all right if they want to, so why not leave it to them? I'd opt for May if I were you.

Even if drinking is the "in" thing in your crowd, it needn't crowd you out. Learn the facts from Ann Landers's booklet, "Booze and You – For Teen-Agers Only." Send 50 cents in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Ann Landers, P. O. Box 1400, Elgin, Ill. 60120.

FTC reports lids plentiful next year

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission staff has rejected virtually all the accusations of unfair practices and collusion leveled against the makers and distributors of home canning lids and jars.

Manufacturers who projected a 30 per cent increase in demand for the one-use-only jar lids this season and have produced 34 per cent more than last year were hit instead with "an astronomical increase" in demand, said Robert E. Liedquist, acting director of the FTC Bureau of Competition.

Rep. Charles J. Carney, DOhio, chairman of the House Small Business Committee's panel hearing the FTC report Wednesday, immediately dubbed it a "whitewash" of wholesalers' and retailers' roles.

Liedquist told him the five FTC commissioners already had ordered a continued monitoring of the canning-lid industry as it prepares for the 1976 season, as Carney requested.

The FTC staff made a sevenweek investigation of the canning lid shortage after some consumers and public interest groups contended the industry was guilty of wrongdoing.

Liedquist said the entry of several new manufacturers into the market—actually major corporations who expanded their product lines at relatively little expense—"should be able to produce enough lids (next year) to accommodate every household in America."

Production capacity of what until two years ago was a declining industry will be up Jan. 1 by 100 per cent over capacity at the start of this year, with more expansion planned during 1976, he said.

Liedquist said the shortage of lids was caused by "unprecedented demand which the industry was unprepared to supply, despite substantial increases in jar-lid production."

Subsidizing large families would create stronger family ties, stronger country

In this age of planned parenthood and professional child care, the idea of the federal government subsidizing large families — and mothers and other relatives to raise them — may seem radical.

But Dr. Robert S. Mendelsohn, associate professor of preventive medicine and community health at University of Illinois School of Medicine and former national director of the Head Start Medical Consultation Service, feels large families may be the key to this country's survival.

He argues parents and their relatives must join together to form a child-care system instead of depending on such persons as social workers, nurses and others to do the job.

"The best child-welfare system consistes of children being raised not in day-care centers, not by professional advocates, but in their own homes, by their own fathers and mothers, assisted by aunts, uncles, cousins and grandparents," Mendelsohn said in recent testimony before a House-Senate hearing on the 1975 child and family services bill.

"Th helping professional — social worker, teacher, obstetrician, pediatrician, psychiatrist, psychologist, educator, nurse — representss inherently and in practice a threat to family relationships," he continued. "The so-called 'helping progessional' may give the image of a family friend, but in reality — both historically and on the contemporary scene —he is the enemy of the family. Any action that increases the power of the professional automatically lessens the strength of the family."

Mendelsohn's belief is based "On an assumption the survival of society depends on family strength," he said in a recent interview.

"There's no way to have a strong family when it's small," Mendelsohn added. "Scientific studies have shown that large families are healthier than small ones. Margaret Mead and Andrew Billingsley have been saying this for years."

Although most people view professionals as supporting the family, they actually weaken it, Mendelsohn said. "The cycle starts at the hospital, which usuaully doesn't like having parents around."

Even at birth, Mendelsohn noted, the baby is separated from the mother and put in a nursery.

"Once you buy my argument about doctors and hospitals, next are social workers and teachers," he said. "For example, our public welfare system is set up so if the father is found in the house, the family gets no support. So the incentive is for the father to leave."

As for the school system, Mendelsohn said it's set up to "teach children things different from what parents teach them."

He cited sex education which many parents can't communicate to their children, and the new math as examples.

Day-care centers are the most dangerous examples of professionals weakening the family, Mendelsohn said. "They do more damage because they get the chance to teach children at a younger age."

Mendelsohn has mapped out ways to counteract the growing dependence on professionals. He calls for the federal government to establish a child allowance program such a the one in Canada, under which every mother received $6 per month per child. She Gives High Marks to her Airport Job

By CHRIS CONKLING

NEW YORK (AP) — When Lee Cromier "ops," few peple on a plane notice, though she plays an important role in getting their flight into the air.

"Ops" is airline lingo for operations agent, a species of the genus station agent. Briefly, Mrs. Cromier directs planes in and out of their gateway and onto the runway for takeoff. She is one of only a few women in the country who are today doing what was until recently considered a man's job.

It has been a year since Mrs. Cromier started trafficking planes for National Airlines at LaGuardia Airport in Queens. She considers the job ideal for now.

"I got tired of selling tickets behind a counter and I never wanted to learn to fly, even though I grew up near an airport in Haverhill, Mass., and could've learned anytime," the pretty, quiet-spoken 26-year-old blonde said in an interview after sending a plane off to Miami. "There's too much responsibility up there when you're piloting a planeload of people. I've found a job that's different every day, without the tremendous worry."

She understates the importance of her duties on the ground. Hers is a nearly invisible job; when she's working she cannot be seen from inside a plane.

Before she can send up the four planes a day she's responsible for, she first must calculate certain crucial weight factors.

To start she computes the air temperature. As the mercury climbs the plane must weigh less if it is to climb off the ground.

FINAL OKAY—Lee Cromier, an airlines operations agent at New York's LaGuardia Airport, confers with Capt. Roger Browne on flight data she has prepared prior to directing his plane onto a runway for takeoff to Florida.

Next she figures the "operational empty weight" of the craft — the weight of the empty structure plus the crew — which is a constant number for each plane. With this she combines the weight of cargo, baggage, passengers and additional loads, minus the fuel, which results in the "zero fuel weight."

Finally the fuel is added, which gives the "gross takeoff weight." This figure cannot exceed a predetermined "allowable runway weight," which is different for each of the airport's four runways and partly determined by the wing flap settings on the plane.

When these figures have been calculated and double-checked and relayed to the flight engineers the plane is ready for flight.

While the plane is still in its gate Mrs. Cromier dons a pair of headphones that are attached to the nose of the plane to communicate with the pilot. When she receives clearance from the flight tower she orders the auxiliary power cable — which feeds ground power to the plane — to be cut and directs the tractor that hauls the plane to move off the gate and onto the common taxiway.

The plane is positioned on one of three diamonds painted on the taxiway. Here the engines are fired and, after Mrs. Cromier reports to the pilot that there are no obstructions, the plane may leave the diamond for the runway, and the sky.

Once the plane is airborne Mrs. Cromier teletypes the vital statistics to its point of destination. Then she can relax.

"I was a nervous wreck on my first flight," she recalls. "I had never been out on a ramp before and I knew everyone was watching me, because I was new at it and because I am a woman. But I got confidence with each new try. I'm not nervous any more."

She remembers being kidded by her male colleagues when she started, but she says the joking was good natured and brief. "But the guys from the beginning have given me all the support and cooperation I've needed." Her husband, Jack, never laughed at her. He is a ticket agent for National at LaGuardia.

After her bid to become an operations agent was granted, Mrs. Cromier had to teach herself the job. There was no training program. "When I became an ops agent there had just been a strike," she says. "There were no flights for two weeks and that's when I learned my job. I had to learn quicker than most because the man who would have taught me was not around. That was my on-the-job training."

Problems on the job have been few, she says. "About the only difficulty I've had has been with winds. I remember a day when the wind was blowing at 145 miles-an-hour. I was standing under a wing of a plane and I knew that if I moved from that spot I'd be blown away. So I just clung to the side of the plane until a rather heavyset agent, who was not about to leave the ground, came and carried me to safety."

She Gives High Marks to her Airport Job

By CHRIS CONKLING

NEW YORK (AP) — When Lee Cromier "ops," few peple on a plane notice, though she plays an important role in getting their flight into the air.

"Ops" is airline lingo for operations agent, a species of the genus station agent. Briefly, Mrs. Cromier directs planes in and out of their gateway and onto the runway for takeoff. She is one of only a few women in the country who are today doing what was until recently considered a man's job.

It has been a year since Mrs. Cromier started trafficking planes for National Airlines at LaGuardia Airport in Queens. She considers the job ideal for now.

"I got tired of selling tickets behind a counter and I never wanted to learn to fly, even though I grew up near an airport in Haverhill, Mass., and could've learned anytime," the pretty, quiet-spoken 26-year-old blonde said in an interview after sending a plane off to Miami. "There's too much responsibility up there when you're piloting a planeload of people. I've found a job that's different every day, without the tremendous worry."

She understates the importance of her duties on the ground. Hers is a nearly invisible job; when she's working she cannot be seen from inside a plane.

Before she can send up the four planes a day she's responsible for, she first must calculate certain crucial weight factors.

To start she computes the air temperature. As the mercury climbs the plane must weigh less if it is to climb off the ground.

FINAL OKAY—Lee Cromier, an airlines operations agent at New York's LaGuardia Airport, confers with Capt. Roger Browne on flight data she has prepared prior to directing his plane onto a runway for takeoff to Florida.

Next she figures the "operational empty weight" of the craft — the weight of the empty structure plus the crew — which is a constant number for each plane. With this she combines the weight of cargo, baggage, passengers and additional loads, minus the fuel, which results in the "zero fuel weight."

Finally the fuel is added, which gives the "gross takeoff weight." This figure cannot exceed a predetermined "allowable runway weight," which is different for each of the airport's four runways and partly determined by the wing flap settings on the plane.

When these figures have been calculated and double-checked and relayed to the flight engineers the plane is ready for flight.

While the plane is still in its gate Mrs. Cromier dons a pair of headphones that are attached to the nose of the plane to communicate with the pilot. When she receives clearance from the flight tower she orders the auxiliary power cable — which feeds ground power to the plane — to be cut and directs the tractor that hauls the plane to move off the gate and onto the common taxiway.

The plane is positioned on one of three diamonds painted on the taxiway. Here the engines are fired and, after Mrs. Cromier reports to the pilot that there are no obstructions, the plane may leave the diamond for the runway, and the sky.

Once the plane is airborne Mrs. Cromier teletypes the vital statistics to its point of destination. Then she can relax.

"I was a nervous wreck on my first flight," she recalls. "I had never been out on a ramp before and I knew everyone was watching me, because I was new at it and because I am a woman. But I got confidence with each new try. I'm not nervous any more."

She remembers being kidded by her male colleagues when she started, but she says the joking was good natured and brief. "But the guys from the beginning have given me all the support and cooperation I've needed." Her husband, Jack, never laughed at her. He is a ticket agent for National at LaGuardia.

After her bid to become an operations agent was granted, Mrs. Cromier had to teach herself the job. There was no training program. "When I became an ops agent there had just been a strike," she says. "There were no flights for two weeks and that's when I learned my job. I had to learn quicker than most because the man who would have taught me was not around. That was my on-the-job training."

Problems on the job have been few, she says. "About the only difficulty I've had has been with winds. I remember a day when the wind was blowing at 145 miles-an-hour. I was standing under a wing of a plane and I knew that if I moved from that spot I'd be blown away. So I just clung to the side of the plane until a rather heavyset agent, who was not about to leave the ground, came and carried me to safety."

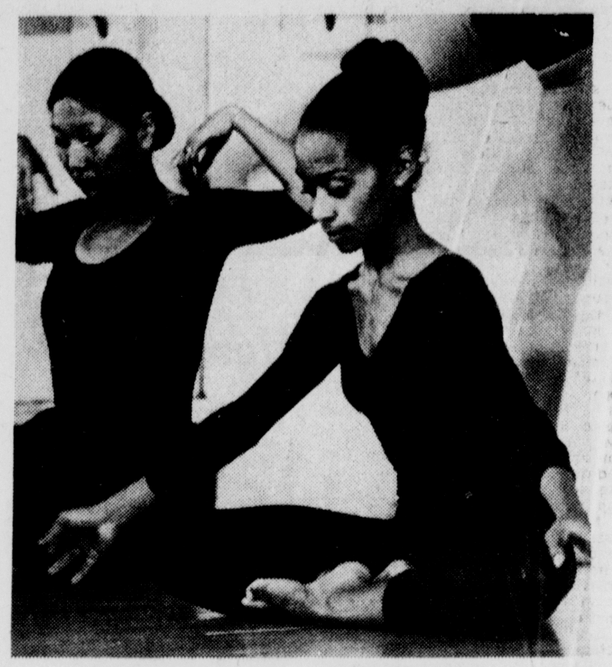
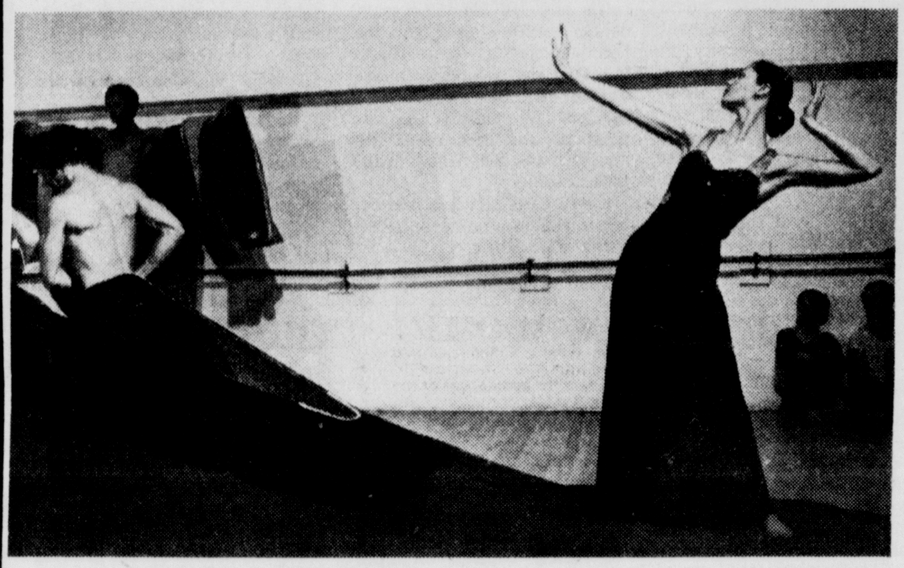
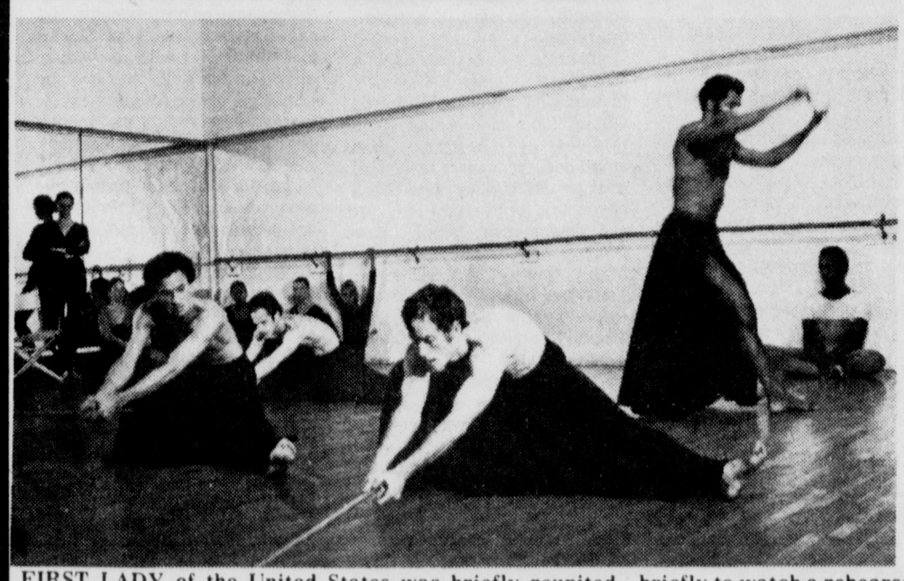
First lady of U.S. meets first lady of dance







FIRST LADY of the United States was briefly reunited with a grand lady of ballet when Betty Ford visited her former dance teacher, Martha Graham, at her New York studio. Mrs. Ford is Honorary Chairman of the Martha Graham 50th Anniversary Celebration Committee which held a special benefit performance this month. The two sat briefly to watch a rehearsal of "Lucifer," the new Graham ballet premiering this month, top left. At top right, performers warm up in yoga-like exercises. The entrance of Night (mid-left) impresses spectators at the rehearsal of Lucifer. Betty Ford, mid-right, enjoys a scene from the ballet (bottom left) as does Martha Graham, (right).

"Don't postpone happiness".....Here is a fine starter home for a young couple, or a "young in heart" couple. Pay owner's equity and assume LOW MONTHLY PAYMENTS. "BR home, with carpet in large LR, hall, & BRS, air conditioned, draperies remain, disposal & range in kitchen, w-d hookup, carport & storage, enclosed back yard.

IN MORLEY, MISSOURI----6 room house and 5 ACRES of good ole' Mother Earth, land presently in soybeans, but already subdivided into 23 building lots, with city water, natural gas, & electric available, on a hard surfaced road. Owner has REDUCED PRICE for a quick sale.

ALL TAKEN CARE OF!!!!!!The plumbing, painting, weather-proofing, landscaping, heating----everything is in top shape, done by present owner who enjoys this older, gracious home. NORTHEND LOCATION, 3 BR home, carpet in LR & BRS, nice "self-cleaning" oven range, and washer hookup in nice eat-in kitchen, lots of nice shade, large front porch, good neighbors, walking distance of Middle School.

THE UPSTAIRS IS DOWNSTAIRS....This cute bungalow will end all that climbing up and down, up and down, up and down. It's all on one floor!!!!And that's not all: Pay owner's LOW equity and assume LOW 7 ½ per cent INTEREST loan. 3 BRS, central heat & air, carpeted, range-oven, hood-fan in eat-in kitchen, nice cabinets, w-d hookup in utility room. This is a home well worth the money.

BY THE FIRESIDE.....You can forget the "burdens" of business, and any other worries, relaxing by this cozy fireplace!!!!!And the rest of the house is equally inviting: 3 BR-family room brick, central heat & air, only 9 months old, fully carpeted, fully insulated (floors, walls, ceiling) thermopane, complete modern & convenient kitchen with dishwasher, disposal, range-oven, hood-fan, and plenty of cabinets, 2 baths, 2 car garage, this is a custom designed home by present owners.

ANXIOUS OWNER & EMPTY HOUSE—OPPORTUNITY!!!! Stop searching for that "one in a million" bargain..... this owner wants A-C-T-I-O-N, and he has slashed price to get it!!!! 3 BR brick, every room has carpet, fireplace in large carpeted LR, small family room off large eat-in kitchen that has carpet, dishwasher, range, hood-fan,& w-d hookup, carport, and back yard enclosed with fence, ideal for small children, corner lot.

Missourians ignoring speed limit

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Many Missourians are apparently ignoring the 55-mile per hour speed limit, although highway patrol officials say their enforcement program has been "vigorous."

"Too many people are not voluntarily complying with the law," said Lt. Col. J. C. Smith, assistant patrol superintendent. "To be successful, you must have a reasonably high percentage of voluntary compliance—85 per cent, leaving us to cope with the 15 per cent breaking the limit."

Smith did not have the percentage of those Missouri motorists voluntarily going along with the energy-saving limit, but he backed up his statements with statistics showing that the number of speed arrests have increased drastically in the state over the last three years.

During the first seven months of 1973, before the 55-mph limit went into effect, Troopers made 32,059 arrests. After seven months in 1974, shortly after the limit went into effect, speed arrests went to 61,150, and after the same time period this year, the number swelled to 98,823.

Smith attributed part of the increase to the expansion of the number of radar units being maintained by the patrol.

"Our enforcement program has been vigourous and we feel like we're getting better compliance than in other states," Smith said. "There are still a lot of people nationwide not observing the limit. That's obvious to someone driving along the road."

The Associated Press did exactly that this week, conducting its fifth speed limit road check since the limit went into effect March 4, 1974.

Traveling at 55, the AP pace car drove 78 miles along U.S. 63 between Jefferson City and Columbia, and along I-70 west of Columbia. Only five cars passed the pace car during the noontime test.

It marks the smallest number of speeders since the checks began, but they were made sometimes at peak traffic periods on interstate highways.

The last check, for example, was made in May along 100 miles of I-270 and I-70 between St. Louis and Columbia. Thirty-four cars whizzed by during that check.

A check made in March along an 80-mile stretch of U.S. 40 and Interstate 70 west of St. Louis found 65 cars going over the limit.

The first AP road check, made on the first day the lower limit was in effect, found the survey car being overtaken by about 50 other vehicles.

Many Missourians must be observing the limit, or if they are exceeding it, it's not by much, according to figures supplied by the Missouri Highway Department.

The department conducts average radar speed checks each month at four locations—I-70 near Odessa, I-44 at Rolla, U.S. 50 near Warrensburg and U.S. 54 near Jefferson City.

The average August speed for all autos and trucks was 56.2 miles per hour. The average speed for the year of 1973, during the pre-55 days, was 64.9 mph.

Motorists apparently feel compliance with the limit is a matter of debate.

"You can be driving at 50 or 55 and they still pass you," said Mrs. Gary Dorsey of Cedar City. She said she observes the limit and believes it should remain in effect.

William Barnett of Jefferson City said he thought "the majority go along with the limit." He said he liked it and thought it should remain enforced.

Later in the evening, however, at 8:30 he was admitted to St. Francis Hospital in Cape Girardeau where he was placed in the intensive care unit. A spokesman at the hospital said Menz was admitted with "multiple injuries."

Mills said the creek rose about three feet in just the hour he was there, and that the car was removed from the ditch barely in time to keep it from washing away, the ditch was filling so fast and the current was so strong.

Menz told officers he had been fishing.

Missourians ignoring speed limit

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Many Missourians are apparently ignoring the 55-mile per hour speed limit, although highway patrol officials say their enforcement program has been "vigorous."

"Too many people are not voluntarily complying with the law," said Lt. Col. J. C. Smith, assistant patrol superintendent. "To be successful, you must have a reasonably high percentage of voluntary compliance—85 per cent, leaving us to cope with the 15 per cent breaking the limit."

Smith did not have the percentage of those Missouri motorists voluntarily going along with the energy-saving limit, but he backed up his statements with statistics showing that the number of speed arrests have increased drastically in the state over the last three years.

During the first seven months of 1973, before the 55-mph limit went into effect, Troopers made 32,059 arrests. After seven months in 1974, shortly after the limit went into effect, speed arrests went to 61,150, and after the same time period this year, the number swelled to 98,823.

Smith attributed part of the increase to the expansion of the number of radar units being maintained by the patrol.

"Our enforcement program has been vigourous and we feel like we're getting better compliance than in other states," Smith said. "There are still a lot of people nationwide not observing the limit. That's obvious to someone driving along the road."

The Associated Press did exactly that this week, conducting its fifth speed limit road check since the limit went into effect March 4, 1974.

Traveling at 55, the AP pace car drove 78 miles along U.S. 63 between Jefferson City and Columbia, and along I-70 west of Columbia. Only five cars passed the pace car during the noontime test.

It marks the smallest number of speeders since the checks began, but they were made sometimes at peak traffic periods on interstate highways.

The last check, for example, was made in May along 100 miles of I-270 and I-70 between St. Louis and Columbia. Thirty-four cars whizzed by during that check.

A check made in March along an 80-mile stretch of U.S. 40 and Interstate 70 west of St. Louis found 65 cars going over the limit.

The first AP road check, made on the first day the lower limit was in effect, found the survey car being overtaken by about 50 other vehicles.

Many Missourians must be observing the limit, or if they are exceeding it, it's not by much, according to figures supplied by the Missouri Highway Department.

The department conducts average radar speed checks each month at four locations—I-70 near Odessa, I-44 at Rolla, U.S. 50 near Warrensburg and U.S. 54 near Jefferson City.

The average August speed for all autos and trucks was 56.2 miles per hour. The average speed for the year of 1973, during the pre-55 days, was 64.9 mph.

Motorists apparently feel compliance with the limit is a matter of debate.

"You can be driving at 50 or 55 and they still pass you," said Mrs. Gary Dorsey of Cedar City. She said she observes the limit and believes it should remain in effect.

William Barnett of Jefferson City said he thought "the majority go along with the limit." He said he liked it and thought it should remain enforced.

Later in the evening, however, at 8:30 he was admitted to St. Francis Hospital in Cape Girardeau where he was placed in the intensive care unit. A spokesman at the hospital said Menz was admitted with "multiple injuries."

Mills said the creek rose about three feet in just the hour he was there, and that the car was removed from the ditch barely in time to keep it from washing away, the ditch was filling so fast and the current was so strong.

Menz told officers he had been fishing.

Sports corner

By Ron Jaynes

Here we are again, scratching our heads trying to figure out how each of us went wrong last week in guessing the winners of Southeast Missouri high school gridiron action. Bobby Gentry had the best mark of them all, hitting on six of seven.

We have four new guessers with us this week, joining the Daily Standard regulars of Bobby and Jerry Gentry; John Greer, Scott Marlin, Dale Forbis, Charlie Francis and yours truly. Trying their hand, or should I say head, at picking the winners are Danny Summerfield, Albert Jay Bowles, Billy Sanders and G. W. Thornbrough. Good luck!

The schedule makers didn't make our chore any easier than last week, perhaps its a little tougher... but that first time around is always double tough.

Placing second in last week's guessing game were Forbis and yours truly with 5-2 marks, followed by the 4-3 figures of Greer and Francis and the tailend marks of Jerry Gentry and Marlin.

So, without any further chit-chat or delay . . . here's the way the game sees this week's prep finals:

CAPE CENTRAL VS. PARKWAY WEST -- The St. Louis power are 7-4 favorites. . . but I think many people are selling the Bengals short. It'll be Cape by about three.

CHARLESTON VS. BELLEVILLE EAST -- The Bluejays are picking on some big boys. . . This may be a mismatch and the gang thinks so . . . 9-2 in favor of BEHS. The visitors by seven or more. We hope we're wrong, but that one game experience Belleville has could spell the difference.

JACKSON VS. DEXTER – If this battle follows tradition. . . The Indians will scalp the Bearcats. But this has already started out the season of surprises and this game could be one although JHS is a 7-3-1 favorite. A one point decision wouldn't surprise me.

MALDEN VS. KENNETT – In years past the Indians have always seemed to rule this traditional battle for the Dunklin County championship. . . The odds are 7-4 in KSH's favor. . . Kennett by seven.

PERRYVILLE VS. STE. GENEVIEVE -- The Pirates alsmot got surprised last week, so they'll be a little more on their toes this one. . . The gang give the Pirats an 8-3 edge. That doesn't look quite right to me, say the Dragons by a pair of TD's.

POPLAR BLUFF VS. GLENDALE -- The Mules will be hard to bring down by anyone this season. . . Their Springfield opponents will be one of the best they'll face. . . but the Mules will kick hard. The panel has PBHS 10-1 favorites. . . shall I say more.

SIKESTON VS. CARUTHERSVILLE -- We omitted last week's guess so that the Bulldogs wouldn't have that to bother them. . . They are 10-1 favorites this week, with about everybody and their grandmother pulling for the Dogs to register a victory. . . They have a king sized assignment, wehich could send them reeling for their 14th straight road defeat. . . Come on Sikeston -- get tough. Dogs by a TD.

CHAFFEE VS. ST. VINCENT – The Red Devils are no longer the doormats of Southeast Missouri football and under coach Charlie Vickery . . . the Red Devils will record some victories. Starting with tonight's two TD verdict. They are 10-1 favorites of the gang.

EAST PRAIRIE VS. ILLMO-SCOTT CITY – The game of the year . . . well not quite, but it should be a dandy. I-SC's Rams have been romping and stomping for years now without any real comptition. . . but tonight they'll meet their match! The Eagles are 7-4 favorites. But that should be a close contest.

HAYTI VS. SOUTH PEMISCOT – The Indians were burried last week. . . but they'll turn the tables tonight. HHS are 9-2 favorites.

PORTAGEVILLE VS. DONIPHAN -- The Dons could spring the surprise. . . but it's doubltful. PHS are 6-4-1 favorites, but should romp.

That's all folks. . . Why don't you try your hand with us next week.

Girls play

Jane Buchanan spikes the volleyball during a girls physical education class at the Sikeston high school. Girls sports activity is picking up in Sikeston and throughout Southeast Missouri.

Girls get into the action...

A new breed of athlete has appeared on the scene at Sikeston High School in recent years -- a competitor that shows every bit as much hustle, desire and spirit as their more publicized colleagues. But unlike the more traditional athletes, the new breed is unlikely to go on to make television commercials for beer or razor blades. These are Sikeston's co-eds; the girl athletes who are commanding more and more attention each year as they pursue their interests in the gym and on the field.

Perhaps due to the publicity and glamour given to such female athletes as Chris Evert, Carol Mann, Billie Jean King and Shane Gould, there has been a steady increase in the interest of girls in sports, especially on the high school level. And as an increasingly large number of girls become interested in participating in athletics, more and more activities are being offered at SHS.

"We've always had an interest in girls' sports here," said principal and former athletic director Bob Buchanan. "More girls are becoming interested, so we're now offering more."

Buchanan said that intramurals have always been offered for the girls, with after-school programs being provided in ghymnastics, basketball, softball and bowling. But much emphasis is now being placed on interscholastic competition. Girls can now letter in four sports at SHS - tennis, golf, volleyball and track.

The most popular fall sport offered for the ladies is volleyball. While volleyball has long been a part of the athletic program of some of the area's smaller schools, Sikeston's program began only three years ago. This will be the second season that Sikeston will play a regular schedule of matches.

"The attitude of the girls is much better this year," said Jane Merrick, who coaches the 24 girls out for volleyball. "They seem to be more enthusiastic about the game."

But only four girls are back from last year's team which won four and lost six. Three of those six losses came against Stoddard County powers Bloomfield, Richland and Dexter, which have had volleyball programs since before the Sikeston girls were born. The team had a 4-3 slate against schools which also have young programs. The "B" team last year was 6-4.

"Our 'A' team is making a lot of progress," said Mrs. Merrick, who has been holding daily practices since August 18. She said that the squad built around a nucleus of veterans Jane Buchanan, Susan McLaughlin, Kelly Hill and Pam Weddington, is finally beginning to catch on to playing offensive volleyball. "Before, the girls used to just bang it across the net, but now they're beginning to use the pass, set and spike to score points."

Of course, team volleyball is not something you can teach to girls in one year. But Mrs. Merrick said that playing the Stoddard County schools last season helped her girls see the importance of playing as a team. "They saw how setting the ball up for the spike worked for Bloomfield."

And while the Sikeston girls will not only look better in their performances this season, they will also look better in their appearance. The school has purchased new uniforms for the varsity to wear, replacing the old pullover jerseys which will go to the "B" team.

Volleyball is also growing on a statewide level. District tournaments were held for the first time last season, and the state tournament will enter the sports scene this year.

Another popular sport for Sikeston co-eds is tennis. Sixteen girls are out for the sport this season, with almost all of them being sophomores. The girls enjoyed a winning season last year as freshmen, and Mrs. Berta Schurenberg looks forward to another successful campaign this year.

"These girls are really serious about their tennis," said Mrs. Schurenberg, who noted that many of the girls take private lessons.

The get-down-to-business attitude of the girls is evident in their practice sessions. They practice for two hours after school each day, devoting much time to fundamental drills and challenge matches. When the squad has matches, and there will be 11 of them this year, the play lasts until about 8 p.m. On away matches, it is often late before the girls arrive back in town.

"When we first started the program, a lot of the girls thought it would be like intramurals," said Mrs. Schurenberg. "But when they found out what it involved, a lot of them dropped out." She said that this year's girls were a hard-working squad.

The team will play eight singles matches and three doubles matches at a meet. Since none of the Sikeston girls are that much better than the others, all of them get to play, although not at every meet.

Tennis dresses have been purchased by the school for the sixteen team members, another indication of the commitment to the improvement of the girls' athletic program. And as in volleyball, the MSHSAA has decided to inaugurate state meets this year for the area's more talented athletes.

The third fall sport offered for girls is golf. The five girls out for golf have been practicing daily since August 20 in preparation for the four dual matches and the district meet.

Mrs. Rosalie Snider coaches the qunitet, which is comprised of Tanya Hesselrode, Beth Hambrick, Tammy Houchin, Lisa Wasson and Dawn Priday. Mrs. Snider says the girls are learning the game, but added that they still have a long way to go. "I'd be very happy if we could get all the girls shooting in the 50's," she commented.

Another sport offered for girls at Sikeston is track. Last spring was the first year for track and field, and Jane Merrick's Sikeston crew caught on quickly. Unlike other sports which have to be taught, track is largely an individual sport in which personal athletic ability is important. Sikeston's girls proved that they have that ability as they more than held their own in a small but tough schedule of meets which were held along with the boys' meets. "We had one girl who placed fourth in the district," said Coach Jane Merrick, who has hopes of sending a Sikeston girl to the state meet in the near future.

Whenever girls' sports are discussed, many can recall the days when basketball was THE sport for women. Years ago when the gals took the court before the boys played, there were usually just as many spectators for the girls game as for the boys. The cheers were just as loud, and the girls on the court took the game just as seriously.

Girls basketball is making a comeback in Southeast Missouri as of late. As for the possible return of the girls' sport to SHS, principal Bob Buchanan says that if there is enough interest and enough surrounding teams to set up a good schedule, then a program will be started. "Right now, there aren't enough other schools to justify the expense."

But a quick check shows that at least eight Semo schools now have girls basketball. Just this week, Cape Girardeau's school approved an allotment of over $4,000 to start a girls' program. Other schools to field a female cage squad this season will be Kelly, Jackson, East Prairie, Chaffee, Twin Rivers, Gideon and Risco.

Sikeston's athletic program for the girls is obviously on the upswing. Although the recent Title IX law states that girls must have the same opportunity to compete as boys, Principal Buchanan says that that decision had nothing to do with the upgrading of Sikeston's program. "These programs have always been available, but there just wasn't enough interest." Buchanan also pointed out that in the sports which are offered to both boys and girls (tennis, golf and track), an equal amount of money is available for the programs.

Although the girls' sports program at SHS still has a long way to go, the high school administrators should be commended for the big steps that have been taken so far. Any sports program has to be built slowly, one step at a time. And make no mistake about it -- Sikeston has a good sports program. Thanks to the progress that has been made and that will be made in the future, it may not be long before a Sikeston girl will see her name on the sports pages of America's major newspapers. The hometown folks can then be proud that she got her start at Sikeston High School.

Sr.'s play golf

A fine turnout of 147 of the 212 golfers who are members of the SEMO Seniors Golf Association participated in the association's annual tournament, held last weekend at the country club and municipal golf courses at Malden.

Gift certificates were awarded to the top six finishers in each age division. Results were tabulated on the basis of the gross score after 36 holes and also on the net score after handicap.

The first 18 holes were played Saturday, with the remaining holes being played Sunday. A "merchandise round" was played on Friday, with golfers trying to beat their own handicaps.

Duffers from as far away as Bonne Terre, Perryville, Piedmont, Charleston and Steele were on hand for the fun and association that the area's older golfers enjoyed at Malden.

Members also took advantage of the get-together to elect new officers for the coming year. Maurice Dunklin of Cape Girardeau was elected president, while Homer Garner of Poplar Bluff was chose as vice president. C. Clarence Scott of Sikeston was re-elected secretary-treasure of the association.

Cubs keep Cards reeling

CHICAGO (AP) — "Our chances?" said Manager Red Schoendienst of the St. Louis Cardinals. "Maybe if I said we didn't have any, these guys might start playing ball."

The Cardinals didn't play much ball Thursday when they were smashed by the Chicago Cubs 12-6 as their flickering title hopes continued to diminish in the wake of 11 losses in their last 15 games.

"You're in trouble any time your starting pitcher gets knocked out in the first inning," said Schoendienst. "But it wasn't all his fault. We just couldn't make the routine plays. We're not playing good ball and we can't throw anybody out."

The Cubs knocked Bob Forsch out in the first inning with a six-run flurry which included two-run singles by Manny Trillo and pitcher Rick Reuschel.

Reuschel, however, couldn't stand the prosperity and was unable to stick around long enough to gain the victory as the Cardinals kayoed him with four runs in the fourth.

All that did was make it close for a while until the Cubs banged across six more runs in the last three times at bat to finish up the season with an 11-7 edge over the Cardinals.

The Cardinals' chances? They still have six games remaining with Pittsburgh.

"We have to win 'em all and then get help elsewhere," said Schoendienst. "But you don't win any titles by expecting help elsewhere. You have to win 'em yourself."

Lou Brock opened the game with a leadoff homer, his third of the season. After the Cubs scored six times in the first inning, the Cardinals made a comeback.

They scored four in the fourth with Keith Hernandez slugging a two-run homer, his third of the season, to make it 6-5.

The Cubs picked up an unearned run in the sixth. They added three more in the seventh when Don Kessinger doubled in one and Jim Tyrone tripled home a pair. The Cubs closed the scoring in the eighth when George Mitterwald tripled home a run and scored on Dave Rosello's second sacrifice fly of the game.

Oscar Zamora picked up his fifth victory against two losses and Darrold Knowles gained his 14th save and second in two days against the Cardinals.

Kessinger and Jose Cardenal had three hits each for the Cubs. Hernandez, who also homered in Wednesday's game, had a pair of singles in addition to his homer.

Schoendienst refused to give up after the Cubs scored six times in the first inning and manipulated the lineup so often that he used eight pitchers to tie a league record held by many. But it didn't help.

By Ron Jaynes

Here we are again, scratching our heads trying to figure out how each of us went wrong last week in guessing the winners of Southeast Missouri high school gridiron action. Bobby Gentry had the best mark of them all, hitting on six of seven.

We have four new guessers with us this week, joining the Daily Standard regulars of Bobby and Jerry Gentry; John Greer, Scott Marlin, Dale Forbis, Charlie Francis and yours truly. Trying their hand, or should I say head, at picking the winners are Danny Summerfield, Albert Jay Bowles, Billy Sanders and G. W. Thornbrough. Good luck!

The schedule makers didn't make our chore any easier than last week, perhaps its a little tougher. . . but that first time around is always double tough.

Placing second in last week's guessing game were Forbis and yours truly with 5-2 marks, followed by the 4-3 figures of Greer and Francis and the tailend marks of Jerry Gentry and Marlin.

So, without any further chit-chat or delay . . . here's the way the game sees this week's prep finals:

CAPE CENTRAL VS. PARKWAY WEST -- The St. Louis power are 7-4 favorites. . . but I think many people are selling the Bengals short. It'll be Cape by about three.

CHARLESTON VS. BELLEVILLE EAST -- The Bluejays are picking on some big boys. . . This may be a mismatch and the gang thinks so . . . 9-2 in favor of BEHS. The visitors by seven or more. We hope we're wrong, but that one game experience Belleville has could spell the difference.

JACKSON VS. DEXTER -- If this battle follows tradition. . . The Indians will scalp the Bearcats. But this has already started out the season of surprises and this game could be one although JHS is a 7-3-1 favorite. A one point decision wouldn't surprise me.

MALDEN VS. KENNETT -- In years past the Indians have always seemed to rule this traditional battle for the Dunklin County championship. . . The odds are 7-4 in KSH's favor. . . Kennett by seven.

PERRYVILLE VS. STE. GENEVIEVE -- The Pirates alsmot got surprised last week, so they'll be a little more on their toes this one. . . The gang give the Pirats an 8-3 edge. That doesn't look quite right to me, say the Dragons by a pair of TD's.

POPLAR BLUFF VS. GLENDALE -- The Mules will be hard to bring down by anyone this season. . . Their Springfield opponents will be one of the best they'll face. . . but the Mules will kick hard. The panel has PBHS 10-1 favorites. . . shall I say more.

SIKESTON VS. CARUTHERSVILLE -- We omitted last week's guess so that the Bulldogs wouldn't have that to bother them. . . They are 10-1 favorites this week, with about everybody and their grandmother pulling for the Dogs to register a victory. . . They have a king sized assignment, wehich could send them reeling for their 14th straight road defeat. . . Come on Sikeston -- get tough. Dogs by a TD.

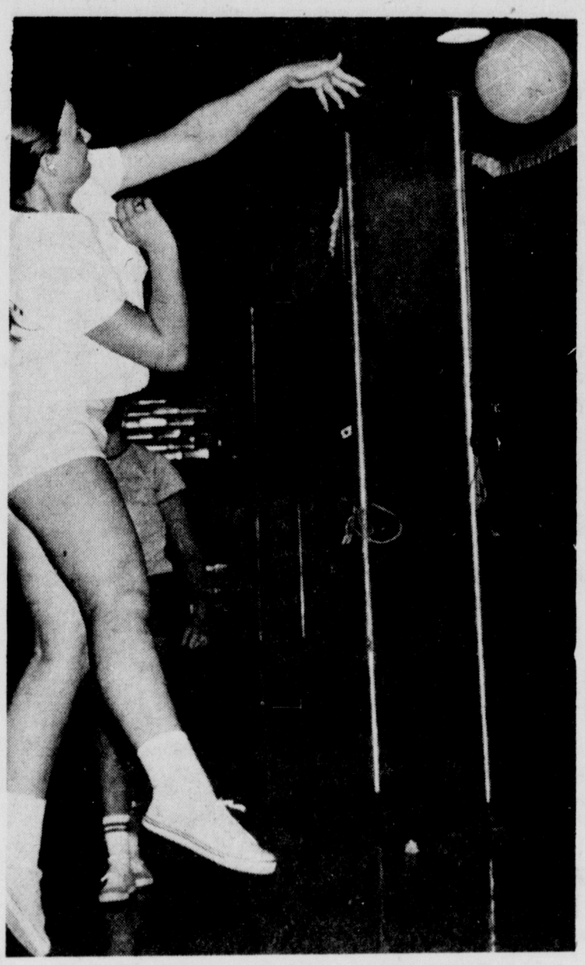
CHAFFEE VS. ST. VINCENT -- The Red Devils are no longer the doormats of Southeast Missouri football and under coach Charlie Vickery . . . the Red Devils will record some victories. Starting with tonight's two TD verdict. They are 10-1 favorites of the gang.

EAST PRAIRIE VS. ILLMO-SCOTT CITY -- The game of the year . . . well not quite, but it should be a dandy. I-SC's Rams have been romping and stomping for years now without any real comptition. . . but tonight they'll meet their match! The Eagles are 7-4 favorites. But that should be a close contest.

HAYTI VS. SOUTH PEMISCOT -- The Indians were burried last week. . . but they'll turn the tables tonight. HHS are 9-2 favorites.

PORTAGEVILLE VS. DONIPHAN -- The Dons could spring the surprise. . . but it's doubltful. PHS are 6-4-1 favorites, but should romp.

That's all folks. . . Why don't you try your hand with us next week.



Girls play

Jane Buchanan spikes the volleyball during a girls physical education class at the Sikeston high school. Girls sports activity is picking up in Sikeston and throughout Southeast Missouri.

Girls get into the action...

A new breed of athlete has appeared on the scene at Sikeston High School in recent years -- a competitor that shows every bit as much hustle, desire and spirit as their more publicized colleagues. But unlike the more traditional athletes, the new breed is unlikely to go on to make television commercials for beer or razor blades. These are Sikeston's co-eds; the girl athletes who are commanding more and more attention each year as they pursue their interests in the gym and on the field.

Perhaps due to the publicity and glamour given to such female athletes as Chris Evert, Carol Mann, Billie Jean King and Shane Gould, there has been a steady increase in the interest of girls in sports, especially on the high school level. And as an increasingly large number of girls become interested in participating in athletics, more and more activities are being offered at SHS.

"We've always had an interest in girls' sports here," said principal and former athletic director Bob Buchanan. "More girls are becoming interested, so we're now offering more."

Buchanan said that intramurals have always been offered for the girls, with after-school programs being provided in ghymnastics, basketball, softball and bowling. But much emphasis is now being placed on interscholastic competition. Girls can now letter in four sports at SHS - tennis, golf, volleyball and track.

The most popular fall sport offered for the ladies is volleyball. While volleyball has long been a part of the athletic program of some of the area's smaller schools, Sikeston's program began only three years ago. This will be the second season that Sikeston will play a regular schedule of matches.

"The attitude of the girls is much better this year," said Jane Merrick, who coaches the 24 girls out for volleyball. "They seem to be more enthusiastic about the game."

But only four girls are back from last year's team which won four and lost six. Three of those six losses came against Stoddard County powers Bloomfield, Richland and Dexter, which have had volleyball programs since before the Sikeston girls were born. The team had a 4-3 slate against schools which also have young programs. The "B" team last year was 6-4.

"Our 'A' team is making a lot of progress," said Mrs. Merrick, who has been holding daily practices since August 18. She said that the squad built around a nucleus of veterans Jane Buchanan, Susan McLaughlin, Kelly Hill and Pam Weddington, is finally beginning to catch on to playing offensive volleyball. "Before, the girls used to just bang it across the net, but now they're beginning to use the pass, set and spike to score points."

Of course, team volleyball is not something you can teach to girls in one year. But Mrs. Merrick said that playing the Stoddard County schools last season helped her girls see the importance of playing as a team. "They saw how setting the ball up for the spike worked for Bloomfield."

And while the Sikeston girls will not only look better in their performances this season, they will also look better in their appearance. The school has purchased new uniforms for the varsity to wear, replacing the old pullover jerseys which will go to the "B" team.

Volleyball is also growing on a statewide level. District tournaments were held for the first time last season, and the state tournament will enter the sports scene this year.

Another popular sport for Sikeston co-eds is tennis. Sixteen girls are out for the sport this season, with almost all of them being sophomores. The girls enjoyed a winning season last year as freshmen, and Mrs. Berta Schurenberg looks forward to another successful campaign this year.

"These girls are really serious about their tennis," said Mrs. Schurenberg, who noted that many of the girls take private lessons.

The get-down-to-business attitude of the girls is evident in their practice sessions. They practice for two hours after school each day, devoting much time to fundamental drills and challenge matches. When the squad has matches, and there will be 11 of them this year, the play lasts until about 8 p.m. On away matches, it is often late before the girls arrive back in town.

"When we first started the program, a lot of the girls thought it would be like intramurals," said Mrs. Schurenberg. "But when they found out what it involved, a lot of them dropped out." She said that this year's girls were a hard-working squad.

The team will play eight singles matches and three doubles matches at a meet. Since none of the Sikeston girls are that much better than the others, all of them get to play, although not at every meet.

Tennis dresses have been purchased by the school for the sixteen team members, another indication of the commitment to the improvement of the girls' athletic program. And as in volleyball, the MSHSAA has decided to inaugurate state meets this year for the area's more talented athletes.

The third fall sport offered for girls is golf. The five girls out for golf have been practicing daily since August 20 in preparation for the four dual matches and the district meet.

Mrs. Rosalie Snider coaches the qunitet, which is comprised of Tanya Hesselrode, Beth Hambrick, Tammy Houchin, Lisa Wasson and Dawn Priday. Mrs. Snider says the girls are learning the game, but added that they still have a long way to go. "I'd be very happy if we could get all the girls shooting in the 50's," she commented.

Another sport offered for girls at Sikeston is track. Last spring was the first year for track and field, and Jane Merrick's Sikeston crew caught on quickly. Unlike other sports which have to be taught, track is largely an individual sport in which personal athletic ability is important. Sikeston's girls proved that they have that ability as they more than held their own in a small but tough schedule of meets which were held along with the boys' meets. "We had one girl who placed fourth in the district," said Coach Jane Merrick, who has hopes of sending a Sikeston girl to the state meet in the near future.

Whenever girls' sports are discussed, many can recall the days when basketball was THE sport for women. Years ago when the gals took the court before the boys played, there were usually just as many spectators for the girls game as for the boys. The cheers were just as loud, and the girls on the court took the game just as seriously.

Girls basketball is making a comeback in Southeast Missouri as of late. As for the possible return of the girls' sport to SHS, principal Bob Buchanan says that if there is enough interest and enough surrounding teams to set up a good schedule, then a program will be started. "Right now, there aren't enough other schools to justify the expense."

But a quick check shows that at least eight Semo schools now have girls basketball. Just this week, Cape Girardeau's school approved an allotment of over $4,000 to start a girls' program. Other schools to field a female cage squad this season will be Kelly, Jackson, East Prairie, Chaffee, Twin Rivers, Gideon and Risco.

Sikeston's athletic program for the girls is obviously on the upswing. Although the recent Title IX law states that girls must have the same opportunity to compete as boys, Principal Buchanan says that that decision had nothing to do with the upgrading of Sikeston's program. "These programs have always been available, but there just wasn't enough interest." Buchanan also pointed out that in the sports which are offered to both boys and girls (tennis, golf and track), an equal amount of money is available for the programs.

Although the girls' sports program at SHS still has a long way to go, the high school administrators should be commended for the big steps that have been taken so far. Any sports program has to be built slowly, one step at a time. And make no mistake about it -- Sikeston has a good sports program. Thanks to the progress that has been made and that will be made in the future, it may not be long before a Sikeston girl will see her name on the sports pages of America's major newspapers. The hometown folks can then be proud that she got her start at Sikeston High School.

Sr.'s play golf

A fine turnout of 147 of the 212 golfers who are members of the SEMO Seniors Golf Association participated in the association's annual tournament, held last weekend at the country club and municipal golf courses at Malden.

Gift certificates were awarded to the top six finishers in each age division. Results were tabulated on the basis of the gross score after 36 holes and also on the net score after handicap.

The first 18 holes were played Saturday, with the remaining holes being played Sunday. A "merchandise round" was played on Friday, with golfers trying to beat their own handicaps.

Duffers from as far away as Bonne Terre, Perryville, Piedmont, Charleston and Steele were on hand for the fun and association that the area's older golfers enjoyed at Malden.

Members also took advantage of the get-together to elect new officers for the coming year. Maurice Dunklin of Cape Girardeau was elected president, while Homer Garner of Poplar Bluff was chose as vice president. C. Clarence Scott of Sikeston was re-elected secretary-treasure of the association.

Cubs keep Cards reeling

CHICAGO (AP) — "Our chances?" said Manager Red Schoendienst of the St. Louis Cardinals. "Maybe if I said we didn't have any, these guys might start playing ball."

The Cardinals didn't play much ball Thursday when they were smashed by the Chicago Cubs 12-6 as their flickering title hopes continued to diminish in the wake of 11 losses in their last 15 games.

"You're in trouble any time your starting pitcher gets knocked out in the first inning," said Schoendienst. "But it wasn't all his fault. We just couldn't make the routine plays. We're not playing good ball and we can't throw anybody out."

The Cubs knocked Bob Forsch out in the first inning with a six-run flurry which included two-run singles by Manny Trillo and pitcher Rick Reuschel.

Reuschel, however, couldn't stand the prosperity and was unable to stick around long enough to gain the victory as the Cardinals kayoed him with four runs in the fourth.

All that did was make it close for a while until the Cubs banged across six more runs in the last three times at bat to finish up the season with an 11-7 edge over the Cardinals.

The Cardinals' chances? They still have six games remaining with Pittsburgh.

"We have to win 'em all and then get help elsewhere," said Schoendienst. "But you don't win any titles by expecting help elsewhere. You have to win 'em yourself."

Lou Brock opened the game with a leadoff homer, his third of the season. After the Cubs scored six times in the first inning, the Cardinals made a comeback.

They scored four in the fourth with Keith Hernandez slugging a two-run homer, his third of the season, to make it 6-5.

The Cubs picked up an unearned run in the sixth. They added three more in the seventh when Don Kessinger doubled in one and Jim Tyrone tripled home a pair. The Cubs closed the scoring in the eighth when George Mitterwald tripled home a run and scored on Dave Rosello's second sacrifice fly of the game.

Oscar Zamora picked up his fifth victory against two losses and Darrold Knowles gained his 14th save and second in two days against the Cardinals.

Kessinger and Jose Cardenal had three hits each for the Cubs. Hernandez, who also homered in Wednesday's game, had a pair of singles in addition to his homer.

Schoendienst refused to give up after the Cubs scored six times in the first inning and manipulated the lineup so often that he used eight pitchers to tie a league record held by many. But it didn't help.

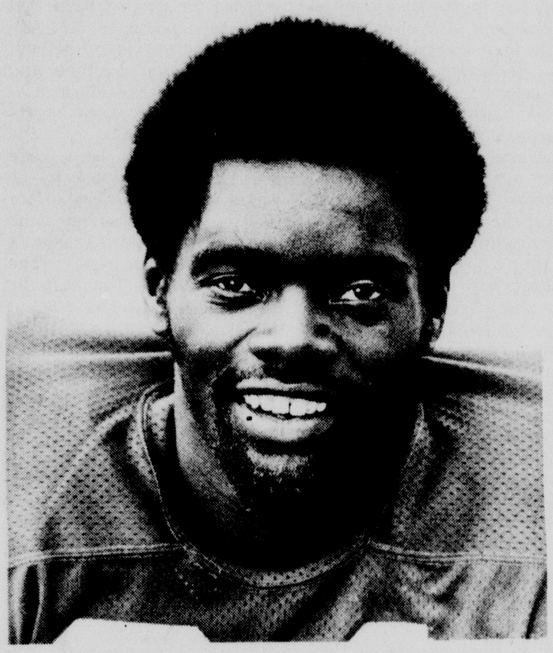
Little man in big man's game



Terry Metcalf

In 1974, Terry Metcalf of the St. Louis Football Cardinals had the kind of year that every football player dreams of having.

The 5-foot-10, 185-pound running back was all-everything for the Big Red,totaling a team-record 2,058 total yards, including 718 rushing, 377 receiving (his 50 catches led the club and were the most ever for a Cardinal running back) , and 963 returning punts and kickoffs. He led the NFL in kickoff returns with a 31.2 average, was selected to the NFL Pro Bowl team, made several all-pro teams, and was named the Big Red's most valuable player by his teammates – all this for leading the Cardinals to their first playoff berth in a quarter-century.

But that's all in the past now. This year Metcalf & Co. are faced with the challenge of defending their hard-earned title of NFL Eastern Division champions. Metcalf, personally, faces the challenge of matching last year's record offensive output.

"It would be nice to do it again. It would be great for me and great for the team," he says, quietly reflecting his self-confidence and a totally realistic view of his value to this team.

"It's not going to be easy because we're not going to be surprising anybody this year," he continues. "They're all going to be trying to knock us off. But, I'd love to. I'd love to get even more if I could. I'd love to have a 1,000 -yard season -- that's my goal and I'm going to strive for it. With the kind of line we have, I think I've got a shot."

One-thousand yards rushing is a goal that could well be within reach of Metcalf in his third pro season, barring any seious injuries. And it's because small, active runners like himself run a high injury risk that coach Don Caryell has used his star on only a limited basis in the first five preseason games. It's a plan Terry doesn't necessarily care for, but he says he'll live with it.

"I don't like it, but I understand why they're doing it," he says. "Why risk getting me injured during the presesason?

"They're playing me just enough to get my timing down," he continues. "I played more last week against Minnesota and will play some this week. I'm just hopeful that everything works out all right."

Metcalf's action so far, has been limited. He didn't play at all in the preseason opener at Kansas City, then carried only 13 times in the next three games. But in last week's 13-6 win at Minnesota, he played nearly three quarters, gaining 48 yards on 12 carries, and catching five passes for 47 yards.

His five-game preseason stats read: 25 rushes for an even 100 yards, and a team-leading 10 pass receptions for 96 yards. He has yet to return a punt or kickoff. He won't do that until the regular season.

"I feel I'm in shape," he says. "I'm rarin' to go. I wish Sunday was the Atlanta game."

As a little man in a big man's game, Metcalf has met and conquered almost every test put before him. But to him, those on-the-field exploits have to take a back seat to the challenges of a public speaking program put together for himself and Jack Buck by KMOX radio the past offseason.

Metcalf and Buck, sports director at KMOX and host of NC-TV's weekend show "Grandstand," visited several St. Louis-area high schools, speaking to students and showing the Big Red's 1974 highlight film -- a film Terry's teammates kiddingly refer to as the "Terry Metcalf Show."

"Some people may think that sounds easy, but believe me, it's not," Terry says. "In a lot of ways it's tougher than playing in a full stadium. The big difference is that when you're out in front of 50,000 people in a stadium, you're not really communicating directly with them. But when you're speaking to 800 students, you're face-to-face with them."

According to Buck, the students enjoyed being face-to-face with Terry a good deal more than many an NFL defender has.

SHS faces road jinx

It'll be a sore and limping Sikeston Bulldogs squad that takes the gridiron at Caruthersville Friday night, still licking wounds from last week's 14-0 thumping at the hands of Farmington. In the C-ville Tigers, Sikeston will oppose an ambitious, veteran outfit just getting ready to make a run for the Southern Division crown. The oversized Caruthersville team is still enjoying thoughts about last week's 14-6 win over Doniphan and an upset over big-school Sikeston that could spell P-L-A-Y-O-F-F-S come November.

The two heroes in defeat for Sikeston, powerback James Wilder and Tackle Wayne Turpin, are ailing and will be sub-par for the contest, if they play at all. Wilder ran for 80 yards in eleven carries against Farmington, but the 195-pounder is suffering from a deep bruise of his thigh. Turpin was extremely effective at defensive tackle, but his ankle is sprained and he, too, is a doubtful starter.

Size, size and more size is the story from down south. Two, 270-pound tackles and a few more linemen right at the two-to two-fifteen mark will make the Tigers formidable, if not in size alone. Quarterback Audi Tarpley directs an offense that has talent, experience and speed. Runningbacks Jeff Strawn and Wade Malone are both good strong runners that rarely are trapped for a loss. Nine starters return on offense for the Tigers and they all appear to be sure-fingered as not once did coach Harv Welch's crew turn the pigskins over against Doniphan.

Sikeston has had success against Southern division teams in recent years; success that has been all too little against most other opponents. The team is trying to prove this season that the program is back on its feet in football and they would like to start against the highly-touted Caruthersville crew.

The last time a Sikeston team won away from Public Schools Stadium was four years ago, when a last-second t-d pass gave them a 12-7 win over Farmington in 1972. So, the Sikeston losing streak, which members four games in a row overall, is now standing at thirteen in a row for road games. The team would like to make thirteen an unlucky number for their Caruthersville opponents.

The last time the two schools met was in 1964 when Sikeston triumphed 40-19 at Sikeston. The Bulldogs would be overjoyed if they could just pick up where they left off. After all, this comeback has to start somewhere.

SHS faces road jinx

It'll be a sore and limping Sikeston Bulldogs squad that takes the gridiron at Caruthersville Friday night, still licking wounds from last week's 14-0 thumping at the hands of Farmington. In the C-ville Tigers, Sikeston will oppose an ambitious, veteran outfit just getting ready to make a run for the Southern Division crown. The oversized Caruthersville team is still enjoying thoughts about last week's 14-6 win over Doniphan and an upset over big-school Sikeston that could spell P-L-A-Y-O-F-F-S come November.

The two heroes in defeat for Sikeston, powerback James Wilder and Tackle Wayne Turpin, are ailing and will be sub-par for the contest, if they play at all. Wilder ran for 80 yards in eleven carries against Farmington, but the 195-pounder is suffering from a deep bruise of his thigh. Turpin was extremely effective at defensive tackle, but his ankle is sprained and he, too, is a doubtful starter.

Size, size and more size is the story from down south. Two, 270-pound tackles and a few more linemen right at the two-to two-fifteen mark will make the Tigers formidable, if not in size alone. Quarterback Audi Tarpley directs an offense that has talent, experience and speed. Runningbacks Jeff Strawn and Wade Malone are both good strong runners that rarely are trapped for a loss. Nine starters return on offense for the Tigers and they all appear to be sure-fingered as not once did coach Harv Welch's crew turn the pigskins over against Doniphan.

Sikeston has had success against Southern division teams in recent years; success that has been all too little against most other opponents. The team is trying to prove this season that the program is back on its feet in football and they would like to start against the highly-touted Caruthersville crew.

The last time a Sikeston team won away from Public Schools Stadium was four years ago, when a last-second t-d pass gave them a 12-7 win over Farmington in 1972. So, the Sikeston losing streak, which members four games in a row overall, is now standing at thirteen in a row for road games. The team would like to make thirteen an unlucky number for their Caruthersville opponents.

The last time the two schools met was in 1964 when Sikeston triumphed 40-19 at Sikeston. The Bulldogs would be overjoyed if they could just pick up where they left off. After all, this comeback has to start somewhere.

IT'S A MATTER OF BLACK AND WHITE

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — There is one qualified white nurse for every 162 whites in South Africa and one qualified nonwhite nurse for every 674 blacks, coloreds (mulattos) and Asians, says the South African Nursing Association.

Beds for whites total 45,124 in 848 hospitals and 121,560 for blacks.

There are 26,322 white nurses for the country's white population of 4.3 million and 31,600 nonwhite nurses for 21.3 million blacks, coloreds and Asians.

Quarterly funds check to be sent

JEFFERSON CITY — Checks totaling $106,193,971, dated Sept. 12, will be sent out by the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education as the first quarterly payment of state money to the public schools this fiscal year. This $106 million amounts to 26 per cent of the total appropriation for this fiscal year.

The second quarterly payment will not exceed $65 million, or 16 per cent, J. Neil Nielsen, Commissioner of Administration, said today. These payment are lower than the corresponding payments last year in which the state gave the schools 33 and 21 per cent of their appropriation in the first and second payments.

William J. Raftery, director of the Division of Accounting, aid that general revenue was transferred to the State Foundtion Program over the last three months as it became a vailable.He added that a critical cash shortage in the general revenue fund has dictated a reduction in the percentage of the appropriation being paid to the schools early in this fiscal year.

The basic requirements, Neilsen said, for receipt of the money, according to Missouri stautes, include that a school operate 180 days per year; maintain adequate and accurate attendance, personnel and financial records; levy a property tax of not less than one and one-fourth per cent of the district's assessed evaluation; and compute average daily attendance by state standards.

Other payments in fiscal year 1976 will be made Dec. 15, 1975, March 15, 1976, an May 28, 1976.

Quarterly funds check to be sent

JEFFERSON CITY — Checks totaling $106,193,971, dated Sept. 12, will be sent out by the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education as the first quarterly payment of state money to the public schools this fiscal year. This $106 million amounts to 26 per cent of the total appropriation for this fiscal year.

The second quarterly payment will not exceed $65 million, or 16 per cent, J. Neil Nielsen, Commissioner of Administration, said today. These payment are lower than the corresponding payments last year in which the state gave the schools 33 and 21 per cent of their appropriation in the first and second payments.

William J. Raftery, director of the Division of Accounting, aid that general revenue was transferred to the State Foundtion Program over the last three months as it became a vailable.He added that a critical cash shortage in the general revenue fund has dictated a reduction in the percentage of the appropriation being paid to the schools early in this fiscal year.

The basic requirements, Neilsen said, for receipt of the money, according to Missouri stautes, include that a school operate 180 days per year; maintain adequate and accurate attendance, personnel and financial records; levy a property tax of not less than one and one-fourth per cent of the district's assessed evaluation; and compute average daily attendance by state standards.

Other payments in fiscal year 1976 will be made Dec. 15, 1975, March 15, 1976, an May 28, 1976.

Disappearance of Kennett woman is investigated

MARSHFIELD - Authorities in Southwest Missouri said there is a "possibility of foul play" in connection with the disappearance of a Kennett woman whose car was found abandoned on Interstate 44 near Marshfield early Thursday.

An automobile owned by Vera Williams, general delivery, Kennett, was found abandoned on the shoulder of Interstate 44 about midway between Rolla and Springfield, at 2:55 a.m. Thursday, according to a spokesman for the Missouri State Highway Patrol's Troop D in headquarters in Springfield.

Authorities said the keys to the vehicle were found lying outside the car, while a woman's blouse, believed to belong to the Williams woman, was found underneath the car. Two envelopes were found in the front seat of the car, reportedly spotted with apparent blood stains.

The woman reportedly had been staying at the Holiday Inn motel in Lebanon in recent weeks, where her boyfriend had a permanent residence. A spokesman at the motel reported she had checked out Tuesday evening, saying that she was returning to Kennett.

Social Security checks can be direct deposited

People who live in Missouri and 22 other states west of the Mississippi River are getting a special opportunity to have their monthly Social Security and supplemental security income checks deposited directly into their checking or savings accounts, according to Gary Eason, Social Security Administration district manager in Cape Girardeau.

"The direct deposit program is entirely voluntary," Eason said. "People who want their Social Security and supplemental security income checks to continue coming to their homes shouldn't do anything. Their checks will keep on coming as in the past.

"But people who want their checks mailed to a bank, savings bank, savings and loan association or similar institution or a federal or state-chartered credit union can arrange for it with a direct deposit authorization form," he said.

People whose checks are already being mailed to a financial organization should also make direct deposit arrangements with SF-1199 form. The direct deposit program will help prevent loss and theft of Social Security and supplemental security income checks and will eliminate standing in line to cash or deposit them, according to Eason.

Mike and Donna Brown

Youth revival set at First Assembly

First Assembly of God Church, 306 S. Kingshighway, will host a youth revival Sept. 17-21 led by Evangelists Mike and Donna Brown of Kansas City. The services will begin at 7 o'clock nightly except Saturday.

Mike began preaching at the age of 14 in local youth services and weekend meetings. Upon graduation from high school, he attended Central Bible College in Springfield. He has been involved in many different aspects of Christian service, ranging from associate pastor to singing with many different gospel groups, including the Blackwood Brothers the Stamps and the Imperials.

Donna served as a missionary aid to Brazil after graudation from high school. She relates many experiences concerning her work with some of the primitive tribes of the Amazon River basin.

Both Mike and Donna are musically talented, but they have chosen to leave such performances in order to do a more effective ministry on the field.

Bible-centered preaching is the rule instead of the exception in Mike's case, and the evangelistic team has a great ministry with the youth as well as adults.

Dexter church to host 10-week training course

DEXTER — A 10-week course on Christian coommitment titled, "Edge of Adventure: An Experiment in Faith", will be offered at the Dexter United Methodist Church at 8 p.m. on Wednesdays from Oct. 1 through Dec. 3.

The course is open to anyone aged 16 and up, regardless of church affiliation. It is designed to be a 10-week adventure for people who want a deeper commitment to God in their total lives, rather than a denominational emphasis.

The authors of the reading book and response books that will be used in the course are Keith Miller,a layman who is the author of several bestsellers, including Taste of New Wine", "Second Touch", and "The Becomers", and Bruce Larson, an ordained minister who is the author of several books and articles, including "Dare to Live Now".

Each writer speaks from his own perspective and from years of struggling to find out how to live an authentic Christian life. The belief that the coming emphasis for the church's thought and life is on people's relationships with God and each other, rather than on doctrine and abstract concepts.

Participants in the course will begin to learn approaches to prayer, the scriptures, changes in relationships with family members and other significant persons, handling fears, loneliness, anxieties and failures and other problems those who try to take God seriously and personally inevitably faces.

Larson and Miller will "go along with the group" on cassette tapes as they discuss the problems and meanings they have found in attempting to live on the Christian journey. The tapes and reading text will serve as a springboard for discussion at the group meetings.

A fee will be charged for the reading and response books needed in the course. Husband and wife or two in the same faimily may purchase one reading book to share, but each will need an individual response book.

Anyone interested in registering for this course should contact Mrs. Vena Godwin, leader of the course, at telephone number 624-4390 by Monday.

THE BIBLE
No. 204. Haman Is Executed

After Haman's humiliation of honoring Mordecai when he had expected to hang him, he went in with the king to Esther's second banquet. Once more, the king prodded Esther to make her request.

Then Esther told her king that she could not be silent when a wicked man had plotted the senseless destruction of her and of all her people. Astounded, the king asked her who had done so. "And Esther said, The adversary and enemy is this wicked Haman. Then Haman was afraid before the king and the queen." (Esther 7:6)

King Ahasuerus walked away into the garden, and Haman begged Esther for his life. In despair, he fell upon the couch where the queen reclined just as the king returned. The king, thinking Haman meant to flaunt the queen in front of him, ordered the death mask thrown over him. A chamberlain said, "...Behold also, the gallows 50 cubits high, which Haman had made for Mordecai, who had spoken good for the king, standeth in the house of Haman. Then the king said, Hang him thereon. So they hanged him on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. Then was the king's wrath pacified." (Esther 7:9-10)

Mike and Donna Brown

Youth revival set at First Assembly

First Assembly of God Church, 306 S. Kingshighway, will host a youth revival Sept. 17-21 led by Evangelists Mike and Donna Brown of Kansas City. The services will begin at 7 o'clock nightly except Saturday.

Mike began preaching at the age of 14 in local youth services and weekend meetings. Upon graduation from high school, he attended Central Bible College in Springfield. He has been involved in many different aspects of Christian service, ranging from associate pastor to singing with many different gospel groups, including the Blackwood Brothers the Stamps and the Imperials.

Donna served as a missionary aid to Brazil after graudation from high school. She relates many experiences concerning her work with some of the primitive tribes of the Amazon River basin.

Both Mike and Donna are musically talented, but they have chosen to leave such performances in order to do a more effective ministry on the field.

Bible-centered preaching is the rule instead of the exception in Mike's case, and the evangelistic team has a great ministry with the youth as well as adults.

Dexter church to host 10-week training course

DEXTER — A 10-week course on Christian coommitment titled, "Edge of Adventure: An Experiment in Faith", will be offered at the Dexter United Methodist Church at 8 p.m. on Wednesdays from Oct. 1 through Dec. 3.

The course is open to anyone aged 16 and up, regardless of church affiliation. It is designed to be a 10-week adventure for people who want a deeper commitment to God in their total lives, rather than a denominational emphasis.

The authors of the reading book and response books that will be used in the course are Keith Miller,a layman who is the author of several bestsellers, including Taste of New Wine", "Second Touch", and "The Becomers", and Bruce Larson, an ordained minister who is the author of several books and articles, including "Dare to Live Now".

Each writer speaks from his own perspective and from years of struggling to find out how to live an authentic Christian life. The belief that the coming emphasis for the church's thought and life is on people's relationships with God and each other, rather than on doctrine and abstract concepts.

Participants in the course will begin to learn approaches to prayer, the scriptures, changes in relationships with family members and other significant persons, handling fears, loneliness, anxieties and failures and other problems those who try to take God seriously and personally inevitably faces.

Larson and Miller will "go along with the group" on cassette tapes as they discuss the problems and meanings they have found in attempting to live on the Christian journey. The tapes and reading text will serve as a springboard for discussion at the group meetings.

A fee will be charged for the reading and response books needed in the course. Husband and wife or two in the same faimily may purchase one reading book to share, but each will need an individual response book.

Anyone interested in registering for this course should contact Mrs. Vena Godwin, leader of the course, at telephone number 624-4390 by Monday.

Continental Congress:

64 Articles of War approved

EDITOR'S NOTE — Paul Revere's famous ride was history. British and American blood had been spilled at Lexington and Concord. The Second Continental Congress was trying to form and finance an army, and the sentiment among the delegates for a settlement with Britain was fading.

Associated Press Writer

PHILADEALPHIA (AP) — The Second Continental Congress convened on May 10, 1775 and named two committees — one to make a last stab at peace with the Crown, the second to draw up an army in case the first failed.

Inside the Statehouse on Chestnut Street delegates from the 13 colonies grappled with America's destiny from curving rows of wooden chairs. Outside, volunteer soldiers in unmatching homespun drilled on open greens.

Perhaps it was the restless cadence of their drums that persuaded Congress on May 13 to approve 64 Articles of War, snapping in two the olive branch the first committee was nurturing.

In just four days Congress had set the country on an irreversible course. Five days later a courier would bring news that would further cement that course's finality.

Ethan Allen and his Green Mountain Boys, with a hand from Benedict Arnold, had captured Ft. Ticonderoga on May 10. The Redcoats, according to the express rider, had surrendered without a shot after Allen had hollered to give up "in the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress."

The Articles of War had set up the procedures for an army. but it had not established one. Nor had it granted authority to Allen and Arnold to attack the British garrison.

Congress was buzzing. Some members proposed that the cannon seized by the American militiamen be returned to the king along with an apology. Others crowed over the victory.

The furor finally died and the delegates spent the next month in debate over the makeup of the "Continental' Army" and who should lead it. Geographic jealousies and top-heavy egos bogged down the proceedings. Almost anything was debatable. For instance, the better part of one hot day was spent arguing whether the windows should be shut to keep horseflies and a breeze out, or opened to let both in.

Delegate John Admas would recount that wordiness was inevitable because every delegate considered himself "a great man, an orator, a critic, a statesman." In a letter to his wife he wrote that were it "moved that three and two make five, we should be entertained with logic and rhetoric, law, history, politics, and mathematics, and then we should pass the resolution unanimously in the affirmative."

The debate on the structure of America's army ended June 15. John Hancock, presiding as president in place of Virginia's Peyton Randolph, lowered his gavel and announced:

"It is the order of Congress to inform George Washington of the unanimous vote in choosing him to be ... commander in chief of the forces raised, and to be raised, in defense of American liberty."

Under the Articles of War, the 13 colonies named the regimental and company officers. Iongress named the generals. Washington's orders were to proceed to Cambridge, Mass. On June 23 he rode northward.

Adams, in another letter to his wife, described the departure:

"I have this morning been out of town to accompany our generals, Washington, Charles Lee, Philip Schuyler, a little way on their journey ... All the delegates from Massachusetts, wih their servants and carriages, attended; many others of the delegates from Congress; a large troop of lighthorse in their uniforms; playing music. Such is the pride and pomp of war."

The six companies of backcountry rifleman that Congress had envisoned as the army's backbone, arrived in Cambridge after Washington. Many were hunters in coon-skinned caps. They were itchy for action and none came. So they drank and gambled. And fought among themselves.

The new commander in chief would have to build an army before he could war against the eneoy. He appealed to Congress for help. He needed uniforms ammunition, guns, food. Congress, relying on printing press money — Continental dollars that soon would be worthless — scraped together what it could.

At Ben Franklin's suggestion, the delegates voted to arm some units with pikes nd spears, bows and arrows.

Word reached the colonists in the fall that King George had officially declared war. Congress responded by calling for 30,000 volunteers and establishing a navy.

Before the year was out, the Americans had captured Boston from the Redcoats. But English sailors had burned the town of Falmouth (now Portland), Maine, and American forces had suffered heavy losses in an ill-fated attempt to capture Quebec.

Each patriot death fired atred for the British, bringing America closer to a total break with the Crown.

When the Second Continental Congress had convened, the concept of independence had for many delegates a ring of treason about it. John Adams had opened the proceedings in May of 1775 with a proposal that the colonies abolish their royal charters. It was too much, too soon, and the motion met a quick death.

But by the spring of 1776 the country's mood had changed. Liberty and freedom were words to be shouted. Independence had become the password to America's future.

The Spirit of '76 was fueled by a man named Thomas Paine, a clever propogandist whose sulfurous words burned the last bridges between England and America. He labeled King George "the royal brute of Britain ... a hardened, sullen-tempered Pharoah," and advocated a final separation so as not to "leave the next generation to be cutting throats, under the violated, unmeaning names of parent and child."

The people listened, and on June 7 delegate Richard Henry Lee of Virginia took the bold step that had tripped up other men.

Let it be resolved, he said, "That these United States are, and of a right ought to be, free and independent states, that they are absolved of all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connections between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved."

What Lee had offered was a declaration of independence.

After much soul-searching, Congress passed it on July 2, 1776. A nation was born. John Adams was so excited he wrote two letters to his wife.

This "second day of July will be the most memorable epoch in the history of America," said Adams. "I am apt to believe that it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the Great Anniversary Festival ... commemorated ... by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty ... solemnized with pomp, and parade, with shows, games, sports, bonfires and illuminations."

History would prove him wrong. T e nation's birthday would be celebrated two days later, and it would be Thomas Jefferson who would be remembered as the framer of the Declaration of Independence, not Richard Henry Lee.

Here's what happened:

Shortly after Lee introduced his resolution, Congress appointed a committee to draft a document justifying to the world America's impending split with England. The writing chore fell to Jefferson.

He submitted the document to Congress on June 28. IT WAS READ TO THE MEMBERS ON July 3 — the day after the 13 colonies had ratified Lee' motion for independence.

The delegates scrutinized Jefferson's offering, cherishing at once certain passages, making changes in others. They adopted it on July 4, 1776, and read it from the Statehouse steps four days later.

"... We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the ..."

Any fifth-grader can fill in the last three words. But who can remember what Lee said? Perhaps he lost his place in history because he was simply out-written and out-edited.

FUNNY BUSINESS — By Roger Bollen

What's the law?

The case of the bachelor's wife

By JACK STRAUSS, LL.B.

George was a great opportunist. As example, if he met a wolf at the door, you could bet that he'd probably end up wearing a fur coat the next day. And by parlaying one opportunity after another, he soon accumulated a large fortune and even a larger reputation in the business world.

Thus, it was no surprise when a magazine decided to devote an entire article to George's successful rise to fame. What was surprising, however, to George's weepy wife, was that the article stated that George was a bachelor.

Taking time out from dabbing her eyes, George's wife sued the publisher of the magazine for libel.

"My goodness!" she told the judge. "If the public thinks that my husband is a bachelor, as the article said he was, what to you suppose they think I am? And that doesn't require an answer if you're a gentleman."

"They can't think anything," retorted the publisher, "because, while George may have been erroneously described as a bachelor, his wife was nowhere mentioned in the article. And, if she wasn't mentioned, how could she claim to have been libelled?"

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you permit George's weepy wife to collect for libel?

This is how the judge ruled: NO! The judge held that since there was no reference to George's wife in the article, but dealt exclusively with George, whe was not libeled. Nothing defamatory was written about her. As for George, concluded the judge, he wasn't libeled either since there is nothing wrong or immoral in being a bachelor.

Thyroid problem needs care

By Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am 67 years of age and was a business woman for the last 30 years. My work was my entire life. About 10 years ago I had one thyroid gland removed. Two years later I had the other removed. I also sold my business with plans to travel.

Three months after the second thyroid operation I had been put on no medication, and I was so weak I could hardly walk, speak, or think. When I made the doctor realize how weak I was, both physically and mentally, he had tests run on me. The blood tests showed I was in the danger zone for both calcium and phosphorus. I was diagnosed as having hypocalcemia and hypoparathyroidism.

The doctor put me on calcium which helped very little until he added dihydrotachysterol. The treatment gradually corrected my blood level of both calcium and phosphorus. But, I have never gotten rid of all the muscle spasms, particularly in the leg and arm muscles. It is very painful and a great effort to walk up stairs and get up from sitting in a low chair.

My doctor said that when I had the thyroid operation the parathyroid glands must have been removed, and there was no function from them.

I would like your opinion on the prognosis of my problem and the effects of dihydrotachysterol. Is there any other drug to use with at least the same effect or better? The spasms have begun in the organs as well, and I can do little exertion because of shortness of breath.

My doctor had me do without the use of any drug except thyroid tablets to see if I could do without, but I am getting very weak and depressed.

DEAR READER — You have a rare condition. The tiny parathyroid glands are like small buttons imbedded in the edge of the thyroid gland. Incidentally, you must have had a lobe or part of the thyroid removed the first time and more the second time as there is only one thyroid gland. Rarely the parathyroid glands are injured or removed when the thyroid gland is removed.

Shortly after surgery a patient may appear to have low or absent parathyroid function but regain it in time. This is why your doctor took you off treatment, to find out if you had recovered.

The parathyroid glands regulate the level of calcium and phosphorus in your blood. When they are not functioning the level of calcium falls markedly. Increased bone density from deposition of calcium and arthritic-like changes may occur.

The usual symptoms are muscle spasms, cramps, mental confusion, difficulty in breathing, sometimes with spasm of muscles related to breathing, nausea, vomiting, lethargy and a host of other symptoms similar to what you describe. The symptoms can be relieved with adequate treatment.

Initially some doctors use intravenous calcium and vitamin D to raise the blood level of calcium and lower the level of phosphorus at once. After that the usual treatment is with dihydrotachysterol. This is a hormone that raises blood calcium and is very useful.

The prognosis is excellent, with expectation that such a person will live a normal, full life span if properly treated. You should see your doctor at once, though, because of your return of symptoms. He will probably want to put you back on treatment.

For information on how your lungs work, write to me in care of this newspaper at P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019. Send 50 cents, a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope, and ask for The Health Letter number 2-4, Keeping Your Lungs Fit.

What's the law?

The case of the bachelor's wife

By JACK STRAUSS, LL.B.

George was a great opportunist. As example, if he met a wolf at the door, you could bet that he'd probably end up wearing a fur coat the next day. And by parlaying one opportunity after another, he soon accumulated a large fortune and even a larger reputation in the business world.

Thus, it was no surprise when a magazine decided to devote an entire article to George's successful rise to fame. What was surprising, however, to George's weepy wife, was that the article stated that George was a bachelor.

Taking time out from dabbing her eyes, George's wife sued the publisher of the magazine for libel.

"My goodness!" she told the judge. "If the public thinks that my husband is a bachelor, as the article said he was, what to you suppose they think I am? And that doesn't require an answer if you're a gentleman."

"They can't think anything," retorted the publisher, "because, while George may have been erroneously described as a bachelor, his wife was nowhere mentioned in the article. And, if she wasn't mentioned, how could she claim to have been libelled?"

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you permit George's weepy wife to collect for libel?

This is how the judge ruled: NO! The judge held that since there was no reference to George's wife in the article, but dealt exclusively with George, whe was not libeled. Nothing defamatory was written about her. As for George, concluded the judge, he wasn't libeled either since there is nothing wrong or immoral in being a bachelor.

Thyroid problem needs care

By Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am 67 years of age and was a business woman for the last 30 years. My work was my entire life. About 10 years ago I had one thyroid gland removed. Two years later I had the other removed. I also sold my business with plans to travel.

Three months after the second thyroid operation I had been put on no medication, and I was so weak I could hardly walk, speak, or think. When I made the doctor realize how weak I was, both physically and mentally, he had tests run on me. The blood tests showed I was in the danger zone for both calcium and phosphorus. I was diagnosed as having hypocalcemia and hypoparathyroidism.

The doctor put me on calcium which helped very little until he added dihydrotachysterol. The treatment gradually corrected my blood level of both calcium and phosphorus. But, I have never gotten rid of all the muscle spasms, particularly in the leg and arm muscles. It is very painful and a great effort to walk up stairs and get up from sitting in a low chair.

My doctor said that when I had the thyroid operation the parathyroid glands must have been removed, and there was no function from them.

I would like your opinion on the prognosis of my problem and the effects of dihydrotachysterol. Is there any other drug to use with at least the same effect or better? The spasms have begun in the organs as well, and I can do little exertion because of shortness of breath.

My doctor had me do without the use of any drug except thyroid tablets to see if I could do without, but I am getting very weak and depressed.

DEAR READER — You have a rare condition. The tiny parathyroid glands are like small buttons imbedded in the edge of the thyroid gland. Incidentally, you must have had a lobe or part of the thyroid removed the first time and more the second time as there is only one thyroid gland. Rarely the parathyroid glands are injured or removed when the thyroid gland is removed.

Shortly after surgery a patient may appear to have low or absent parathyroid function but regain it in time. This is why your doctor took you off treatment, to find out if you had recovered.

The parathyroid glands regulate the level of calcium and phosphorus in your blood. When they are not functioning the level of calcium falls markedly. Increased bone density from deposition of calcium and arthritic-like changes may occur.

The usual symptoms are muscle spasms, cramps, mental confusion, difficulty in breathing, sometimes with spasm of muscles related to breathing, nausea, vomiting, lethargy and a host of other symptoms similar to what you describe. The symptoms can be relieved with adequate treatment.

Initially some doctors use intravenous calcium and vitamin D to raise the blood level of calcium and lower the level of phosphorus at once. After that the usual treatment is with dihydrotachysterol. This is a hormone that raises blood calcium and is very useful.

The prognosis is excellent, with expectation that such a person will live a normal, full life span if properly treated. You should see your doctor at once, though, because of your return of symptoms. He will probably want to put you back on treatment.

Park has Braille trail

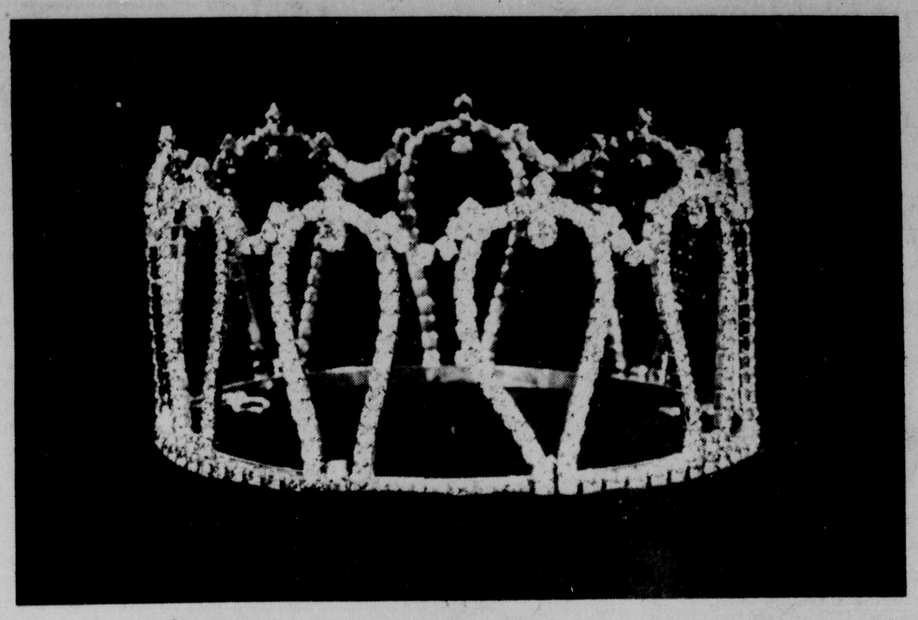
JEFFERSON CITY — The Elephant Rocks State Park Braille Trail, first self-guiding nature trail for the visually handicapped in a Missouri State Park, has been expanded with several alternate loops to accommodate visitors in wheelchairs, according to William K. Wight, director of the Division of Parks and Recreation in the Missouri Department of Natural Resources.

Originally designed specifically for the visually handicapped, the Braille trail features a series of explanatory signs in both Braille and English, and has been providing an outstanding recreational experience for park visitors since its opening and designation as a National Recreation Trail in October 1973.

The alternate loops will allow visitors in wheelchairs to negotiate portions of the trail which were previously too narrow to pass through.

"We're proud that the first National Recreation Trail in Missouri was built in one of our state parks. The new loops were added in an effort to provide recreational opportunities for as many visitors to the park as possible," Wight said.

Elephant Rocks State Park, located in Iron County on the northeast edge of Graniteville, is known for its huge granite outcroppings, estimated by geologists to be one billion years old.Erosiion and weathering have formed the rocks into shapes resembling elephants.



The new crown

The 1976 Sikeston Cotton Carnival Queen will have a new crown to wear during her year-long reign. She will wear it to all functions in which she represents the American Legion Cotton Carnival. When her reign ends next year, she will present it to the new queen. This year's contest is scheduled Sept. 27.

Missouri Supreme Court rules:

Governor cannot pardon persons whose licenses revoked by liquor control

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Missouri Constitution does not empower the governor to pardon persons whose licenses have been revoked by the state's liquor control supervisor, the Missouri Supreme Court ruled recently.

"To do so would pave the way for a great expansion of this power into the myriad of administrative decisions which affect thousands of persons throughout the state," the court said in a decision written by Chief Justice Robert E. Seiler.

In a 6-1 decision, the court reversed and remanded the decision of Judge Philip G. Hess of the 23rd Judicial Circuit in Jefferson County.

In 1967, the state supervisor of liquor control revoked the liquor license of James D. Theodoro on charges that he had sold intoxicating beverages on Sunday and had permitted the sale of intoxicating beverages by a minor.

In 1972, then Gov. Warren E. Hearnes issued a pardon to "pardon, release, and discharge" Theodoro from the revocation of his license. The liquor control department issued Theodoro a new license, but when it came up for renewal he was denied on the basis of a state statute which says no personal shall be granted a license if the license had been revoked in the past.

But Judge Hess reversed the department's decision and liquor control officials then appealed the case.

The high court noted that the constitution grants pardoning power to the governor "after conviction, for all offenses."

But in reversing Judge Hess's decision, the court said the constitution was referring to "convictions" in criminal cases and not administrative proceedings.

"The power to pardon has been traditionally described in the courts of this state as a power to exempt individuals from punishment which the law inflicts for crimes committed," Judge Seiler wrote.

But in a dissenting opinion, Judge John E. Bardgett noted that the actions which led to the original revocation of the liquor license were "violations of law and could be the subject of a criminal prosecution."

He said that if Theodoro had been convicted by a court, the governor would have the power to pardon those convictions.

"In my opinion, that pardon would remove d those convictions from automatically disqualifying the person from holding a liquor license," Judge Bardgett said.

In another liquor Control Division related decision, the high court ruled 6-1 that the division chief does not have to hold an evidentiary hearing before deciding against renewal of a liquor license.

The high court also said in its decision upholding the process used to deny renewal of the liquor license to Jasper's Italian Restaurant in Kansas City, that the division head is not required to personally testify at a circuit court review of his decision.

Former Liquor Control Supervisor Michael Garrett denied renewal of the license to Jasper Mirabile in June 1974 on the grounds that Mirabile, then sole owner of the business, was not of good moral character. Mirabile had been convicted in federal court two months earlier of using the mails to defraud the state of sales tax receipts.

Mirabile, who has since transferred ownership of the restaurant to his wife Josephine, claimed the license was a vroperty right and denial of its renewal without a hearing a violation of due process.

The court also rejected a claim that the state's liquor license law denies equal protection by not requiring a hearing on renewal or new license applications but doing so in connection with revocation or suspension of licenses.

The court said there is a rational basis for the distinction since once a license is granted the person receiving it should be entitled to county on retaining it for the fixed period of issuance unless it can be shown after a hearing that it should be revoked or suspended.

Sedalia seeking authorization for unique bonding proposal

JEFFERSON CITY — It's a new twist to the old dilemma of whether the chicken or the egg came first.

A Kansas City stockbroker says it's like putting the cart before the horse.

But Sedalia officials say it makes perfect sense for the city to build an industrial park for which no tenants have been contracted. They have asked the state Division of Commerce and Industrial Development to approve a $380,000 general obligation bond issue election to finance construction of the park.

The issuance of municipal bonds to finance projects of this type is common in the state. But in all previous cases the cities have had tenants committed for the proposed facilities.

Officials of the Division of Commerce and Industrial Development are enthusiastic about this new concept for attracting industry, but say there are legal questions to be answered before approval can be given.

"Two problems with this application are that it is a general obligation bond issue and a potential burden to the community and the fact that it is a speculative venture," Don Estil, state director of the Divison, said.

"This is the first time we have been asked to look at a proposal that was not for a specific company and it's the first time that lease payments would not be used to repay a general obligation bond," Estil said.

General obligation bonds usually are guaranteed by the municipality and retired through lease payments by the company. Revenue bonds, which also are used to finance industrial development, are guaranteed and repaid by the company.

Estil said he anticipates that 10 or 20 other communities over the next two years would issue speculative bonds for development if this is approved. "Joplin and Sikeston have talked with me and indicated an interest in using this method to develop industry," he said.

Estil's agency has asked the state attorney general's office for an opinion on Sedalia's request. That opinion, which is expected by Oct. 1, will focus on the speculative nature of the project and the possibility of an unlawful financial burden on the city.

Estil said his office probably would go along with the attorney general's opinion. But, John Hequembourg, Sedalia director of economic development, says the city might take the case to the state Supreme Court if the bond application is denied.

According to Hequembourg, the city received an opinion from a Kansas City bonding attorney before submitting the plan, and the city is satisfied that it is legal and feasible.

"When companies decide to move, they like to move very quickly," Hequembourg said. "We feel that we have to develop the and and have it ready for them ahead of time. This way we know what the cost will be."

Sedalia is planning to finance the purchase of 100 acres for the park over a 12-year period. Payments of $46,000 each year woold come out of the city's general revenues.

"We must create a fund out of our general tax levies to pay the bond, and should increasing costs of providing other city services affect us, then we might have to raise the levy," Hequembourg said.

The city plans to spend $150,000 for the land, $100,000 for sewers and roads and $130,000 for site improvement and utility construction.

Hequembourg says city ownership and development will allow orderly planning of the industrial park, insure compliance with city codes and increase the community's attractiveness to business.

Companies building in the park would purchase the land from the city.

Bill Anthony, a stockbroker for E.F. Hutton Co. in Kansas City, said Sedalia should have little trouble selling the bonds despite problems of larger cities around the nation finding loans.

Anthony said the method of financing the bond through taxes is unorthodox: "This to me is kind of putting the cart before the horse." But if the city is willing to put its full faith behind the bond issue, Anthony said, there should be little problem finding buyers.

Even if Sedalia receives authorization to hold the election, the issuance of the general obligation bonds would not be guaranteed. They still would have to receive a two-thirds majority approval from Sedalia's voters.

Counties to concentrate on legislative package

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Missouri Association of Counties will cncentrate on 5 to 10 bills in its legislative package which is to be presented to the General Assembly before the start of the regular session in January.

Included in the package will be requests for such things as the option to levy sales taxes at the local level, according to Jackson County Execuive Mike White.

White held a news conference here Wednesday after he and the leaders of 13 of the state's largest counties met to bring the counites together to present a unified legislative package.

"We're just asking for the tools to do the job," White said.

And although he said the counties would not be asking the state for more money, two of the bills he mentioned did just that.

One of the county priorities is increasing the amount of money for boarding state prisoners in county jails, and the other involves reimburesement four counties for the care of indigents.

St. Louis County Supervisor Gene McNary said the property tax method of financing county government was inequitable and "the most expensive to administer."

He said most counites would be in favor of adoptinga county sales tax or earnings tax to finance services.

McNary said the reason the counnties have never banded closely toegether before was because "counties have never been squeezed like they are now."

The Missouri Association of Counties has released figures indicating that 28 of the state's 114 counties are technically bankrupt.

The county officials said more meetings will be held before a final legislative package will be ready.

SeMo's student union to 'open for business'

CAPE GIRARDEAU — With the snap of a ribbon at 7 a.m. Monday, a building which Southeast Missouri State University students, faculty members and administrators have looked forward to for near ly 15 years will be "open for business."

The building is a $4 million student union, now officially named the University Center. Under construction since the fall of 1973, the structure was declared "substantially complete" by the contractors on Aug. 22 and the bookstore in the facility has been open since Aug. 25.

But the remainder of the building has been closed while workmen put on the finishing touches and moved in furniture.

The director of the center, Richard Fry, said today that with a couple of exceptions all areas of the building will be ready for full use by Monday.

Memorial Hall has been Southeast Missouri State's student center since 1950 but it has long been too small and university officials have had a new structure in mind since the early 1960s.

Students voted a $5 per semester increase in fees in 1963 to help finance the proposed structure. At that time it was hoped construction would begin within five years.

However, it didn't work out that way. The university's enrollment in those years grew faster than anticipated, and the need for dormitory rooms became more important than the union, an it was pushed into the background.

The idea was revived in 1972 and preliminary drawings for a four-level, 100,000-square foot structure were approved by the Board of Regents late that year.

Next came the working drawings, the call for bids, the awarding of contracts and the start of construction. Originally, the union was to have been completed in April, but a sheetmetal workers' strike in late 1973 slowed progress and almost brought construction to a standstill before it was settled.

The University Center is located just west of Kent Library at the intersection of Normal and North Henderson. Leming Hall, a women's dormitory dating to the early 1900s, was demolished to make room for the new facility.

Park has Braille trail

JEFFERSON CITY — The Elephant Rocks State Park Braille Trail, first self-guiding nature trail for the visually handicapped in a Missouri State Park, has been expanded with several alternate loops to accommodate visitors in wheelchairs, according to William K. Wight, director of the Division of Parks and Recreation in the Missouri Department of Natural Resources.

Originally designed specifically for the visually handicapped, the Braille trail features a series of explanatory signs in both Braille and English, and has been providing an outstanding recreational experience for park visitors since its opening and designation as a National Recreation Trail in October 1973.

The alternate loops will allow visitors in wheelchairs to negotiate portions of the trail which were previously too narrow to pass through.

"We're proud that the first National Recreation Trail in Missouri was built in one of our state parks. The new loops were added in an effort to provide recreational opportunities for as many visitors to the park as possible," Wight said.

Elephant Rocks State Park, located in Iron County on the northeast edge of Graniteville, is known for its huge granite outcroppings, estimated by geologists to be one billion years old.Erosiion and weathering have formed the rocks into shapes resembling elephants.
